ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

All great initiatives face challenges. AFLI is indebted to those who have helped the Scorecard project to surpass the many hurdles we have encountered.

We are grateful first to those who have supported this project from its beginning as a pilot project during the final year of the 7th Parliament. The United States Department of State's Human Rights and Democracy Fund provided timely funding to get the Scorecard off the ground, and the Royal Netherlands Embassy – which has become a committed partner to the Project – offered additional and substantial support, enabling AFLI to share the results of the pilot widely and to receive feedback, which contributed to the improvements that culminated in this publication.

We extend our thanks to the many people and organisations that, along with the Netherlands Embassy, have helped to make the second incarnation of the Scorecard even more successful than the pilot.

Several offices and agencies of the Government of Uganda (GoU) gave their time and support to this project from its infancy. Though there have been bumps along the way, we look forward to many years of constructive engagement with GoU. We would like to thank the Office of the Clerk to Parliament, Parliament's Public Relations Office, the Ministry of Local Government, and the Ministry of Education and Sports for their assistance in our data collection efforts.

In addition to the institutional support of the aforementioned bodies, we appreciate the unwavering commitment of the people who worked with AFLI to make sure that the Scorecard happened. Projset Consultants and Director/Principal Consultant M.J. Robert Kintu provided invaluable advice on the design and implementation of the scorecard, and the research assistants seconded by Projset – Byamah Hillary, Gwoke Joachim, Musunga Douglas, Nansubuga Josephine and Okello Francis – contributed not only hours of sometimes tedious computer work, but also their insight into the Ugandan political process.

We would also like to thank the people from AFLI who have made this project possible. The Executive Board – Hon. David Pulkol, Hon. Elly Karuhanga, Hon. Jessica Eriyo, Mr. Tobias Onweng, Mr. Sylvester Kugonza, Mr. Levi Ochieng, Mr. David Mukholi, Dr. Juma Okuku, and Mr. Frank Muhereza – made many important decisions regarding the trajectory of the project. Executive Director Oscar Okech Kanyangareng and Executive Assistant Patrick Muhumuza provided much needed guidance and support. We also appreciate the strategic counsel and technical support provided by the senior external advisers to the project, Professor Macartan Humphreys of Columbia University and Professor Jeremy Weinstein of Stanford University. Nathan Falck and Jeffrey Love, also of Stanford University, served as Projector Coordinators and we thank them for their superb and tireless work on behalf of the project. Thank you to Jeffrey Krutz of Columbia University for preparing the maps of parliamentary constituencies from data made available by the Uganda Bureau of Statistics.

In addition, we thank the participants in AFLI's first Scorecard Peer Review Panel for their insightful feedback on the Scorecard's content and design. Special thanks to Ben Bella Ilakut of Uganda Christian University, Hon. Aggrey Awori, Jolly Mugisha of UWONET, Norbert Mao, Gulu LC-V Chairman, Mwambutsya Ndebesa and Nakitende Milly of Makerere University, Larak Arthur of the Uganda National NGO Forum, Edith Kibalama of Kituo Cha Katiba, Ndabi Barbara of the Foundation for Human Rights Initiative, Barbara Nambi of the Foundation for Human Rights Initiative and Joyce Ngaiza of the Embassy of the Netherlands.

And finally, our thanks go to the people of Uganda, whose comments and feedback allowed us to improve our methodology immensely, and for whom this project is ultimately designed. We only hope that you find some use in its pages.

FOREWORD

The history of Uganda's democracy since independence in 1962 has been one of upheavals.

Uganda practiced multi-party democracy from independence until 1971, when a military junta took over and ruled by decree. In 1980, multi-party democracy was restored but usurped again by a military junta in 1985. In 1986, after a five year guerilla war, the National Resistance Movement (NRM) government came to power. Thereafter, the NRM instituted a no-party political system based on individual merit. Constitutional reforms in 1995 and 2005 introduced more civil and political rights, with the latter restoring multi-party democracy.

During the period of constitutional reform, significant power was removed from the Office of the President, and the executive arm of government by extension, and transferred to Parliament. As a result, Parliament has had a greater role to play in monitoring the executive, including scrutinizing the annual budget before it is passed and auditing government expenditures.

But this increased responsibility does not come without challenges. The actions of Members of Parliament (MPs) are far removed from the day-to-day lives of voters, who rarely know what their MPs actually do. So, while Parliament is empowered to hold the executive accountable, who may hold the MPs accountable? Some MPs only visit their constituency during election time to solicit votes and then disappear until the next election. Moreover, whatever information is available publicly from Parliament is presented in legal jargon making it difficult for the ordinary person to track the work of their MPs and make an informed evaluation of that work. And in a new multi-party era, after 20 years of no-party rule, it is more important than ever that voters have objective and transparent information to help them assess the performance of MPs as individuals and of Parliament in general.

AFLI has stepped in to provide voters with the information they need to assess how their MPs perform in Parliament. The Parliamentary Performance Scorecard builds on the work AFLI conducted in the pilot Scorecard of the 7th Parliament, but now includes improved measures and additional coverage of work in both plenary and committee sessions. AFLI hopes to further improve the Scorecard next year with measures of constituency service as well.

Beyond describing the performance of individual MPs, the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard assesses the performance of Parliament in general. Specifically, the report describes patterns of performance by party, ascension, gender group, and region in an effort to help voters understand how the institution itself is functioning and how their MP compared with others in the country.

In short, the Parliamentary Scorecard is an innovative project that we hope will help to strengthen democracy in Uganda. It does not aim to find fault with MPs or Parliament, but instead to help Parliament serve its citizens better. As such, it seeks to entrench a culture and spirit of democracy, accountable leadership, and human freedom. This report covers the first session of the 8th Parliament of Uganda. The Scorecard will be produced annually, culminating in a consolidated report at the end of five years.

On behalf of the AFLI Board, I invite you to read this report, and it is my sincere hope that you find it very useful in driving continued democratic reforms in Uganda.

Thank You,

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

A central principle of modern democracy is that by choosing their leaders through electoral processes, citizens are able to hold governments accountable for their actions. The constitution of Uganda provides the legal framework for accountable government of this form. But for Ugandan democracy to be truly effective, voters need to be in a position to evaluate the performance of their representatives and make informed choices about who to elect or re-elect as their representatives.

The Parliamentary Performance Scorecard seeks to help in this task by providing Ugandan citizens with accurate, objective, and comprehensive information about their elected leaders on an annual basis. It is the ambition of the Africa Leadership Institute (ALI) that the Scorecard will contribute to greater transparency and, ultimately, greater democratic accountability in Uganda.

The Parliamentary Performance Scorecard emphasises work in two arenas in which MPs execute their formal responsibilities as advocates for the interests of their constituents and the country.

- First, the Scorecard evaluates each MP on his or her attendance, participation, and influence in plenary debates. Attendance reflects the simple fact of being present for plenary business. Participation reflects the share of debate for which an MP is directly responsible. Influence reflects the share of the debate by other MPs that responds to issues raised by a given MP. For each of these three areas, the Scorecard reports a score and a percentile rank for each MP. In addition, the Scorecard provides qualitative information about the positions MPs take in plenary debates and summarises the topics on which they focus.
- Second, because much of Parliament's work is conducted in committee sessions, the Scorecard provides information on committee membership and reports data on the attendance and participation of MPs in committee meetings. Again, the Scorecard reports a score and a percentile rank, enabling the reader to assess how an MP performs relative to all other MPs in Parliament.

The accompanying report provides a thorough description of each measure and emphasises a few caveats that are important to bear in mind when considering the performance of MPs. It includes the full set of scores for each MP, presented on individual Scorecards. Finally, the report describes Parliament's overall performance and the performance of different subgroups within it.

With respect to Parliament's overall performance, a number of key findings stand out:

- First, average attendance is surprisingly poor. On average, Uganda's MPs attended just 23 out of 89 plenary sessions, and some never attended at all! Committee attendance rates were also low, centring around 41%. On the basic issue of attendance, there is considerable scope for improved performance by Uganda's elected representatives.
- Second, although MPs from Opposition parties appear to perform slightly better on average than MPs from the NRM or independent MPs, the difference is small. The major differences in the performance of MPs are across individuals, not across political parties.
- Third, while front benchers and party leaders perform better on average—in part, due to their particular role in plenary debates—it is still the case that individual backbenchers can score very highly. Indeed, some of the highest scoring MPs in Parliament are backbenchers.
- Fourth, on average, male MPs do marginally better than female MPs in Parliament. However, many individual women do extremely well and, among those elected by universal adult suffrage, women perform better than men on many measures.
- Fifth, there are important differences across MPs based on how they ascended to their seats. On average, MPs elected through universal adult suffrage perform particularly well, those elected to represent special interests do less well, and those MPs that represent the army perform especially poorly.
- Finally, there is a good deal of consistency across geographic regions of the country. There is no evidence that some regions are better represented by their MPs than others.

In addition to providing a description of how MPs perform, the report also describes next steps for the Scorecard. Two issues bear emphasis:

- The first relates to the improvements that we hope will be possible in the future. One goal is for the Scorecard to report information on how MPs vote in Parliament. This is presently impossible since no formal records of individual votes are kept. Second, we hope to provide measures of the activities MPs undertake in their constituencies. Again, to do so will require making use of information that is not presently in the public domain. Support from Parliament and from individual MPs will be required to improve the Scorecard in this way.
- The second relates to our dissemination campaigns. Creating the Scorecard is only the first step. To fully develop the potential of the Scorecard as a mechanism for strengthening accountability in Uganda, AFLI is committed to getting this information into the hands of voters. To do so, every year until the next parliamentary election, AFLI will organise civic education workshops to discuss the performance of MPs in a sample of geographic constituencies. MPs will be invited to attend the workshop held in their constituency in an effort to foster dialogue between constituents and MPs about the activities they undertake in Kampala. Because we cannot possibly visit every constituency in Uganda, AFLI has identified, in advance, the set of constituencies in which we will hold workshops through a fair and transparent process. These constituencies and the method used to identify them are listed in this report.

The founding principles of the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard are objectivity, transparency, and accuracy – values which we believe are embodied in this publication. But this is a living project that will grow and evolve over the remaining years of the Eighth Parliament and beyond. With this publication, we are setting an important precedent, an example that we hope civil society leaders in other countries, both in Africa and beyond, will find inspiring and useful. We are dedicated to producing the most complete and rigorous Scorecard possible every year, and in that spirit, we are open to the advice of Members of Parliament, party leaders, civil society, and the public at large. We welcome your critiques and practical pointers, and, as always, we are open to incorporating any additional data that may be made available to us in future years. With your help, we can make Ugandan democracy stronger.

REPORT ON THE PARLIAMENTARY PERFORMANCE SCORECARD

1 PURPOSE

Democracy is based on the idea that citizens have the right to freely choose their leaders and that, by doing so, they can hold governments accountable for their actions. The basic right of citizens to make, contribute to, and influence decisions that affect them has its roots in classical and contemporary political theory.

The right to hold office and participate in the affairs of the community and the principle of equality before the law were upheld in ancient Greece and Rome. These ideals were later developed and adopted by the American and French revolutions and are now honored widely throughout the world. One of the most fundamental of these rights is political equality; through political equality, the full diversity of interests and values can be brought into policy debate and can be incorporated into decisions. In classical theory, every citizen should have a right to participate equally and no citizen should represent or make decisions on behalf of another. All other conceptions of democratic governance emanate from this theory and presuppose a basic and equal right to public participation.

Contemporary theorists continue to debate these issues. One school of thought argues that the role of the public should be limited to the periodic election of its leaders. Having everyone participate on a continual basis, they argue, is impractical in large societies. Others insist instead that citizens benefit not just from the outcomes of decisions but from direct engagement in decision-making. Participation strengthens, deepens, and enriches individuals' understanding and appreciation of their own capacities and enhances their ability to work productively with others. Participation therefore has both an expressive and educative effect. This approach suggests that representative democracies run the risk of preventing the full development of individual moral and intellectual qualities even if the governing few prove to be entirely competent in handling administrative tasks.

The Parliamentary Performance Scorecard Project is based on the idea that the right response to these concerns is to recognise that it is possible to work within the framework of representative government but still maintain a high degree of public participation in decision making. By empowering constituents to monitor their elected representatives, the Scorecard Project can provide intrinsic benefits by strengthening civic engagement and substantive benefits by producing a more accountable Parliament.

In fact, the constitution of Uganda provides the legal framework for accountable government of this form. The Uganda Information Act 2006 also protects citizens' freedom of access to government information. Unfortunately, however, most Ugandans still find it difficult to follow the activities of their government and cannot meaningfully assess the performance of their elected representatives. For Ugandan democracy to be truly effective, voters need to be in a position to make informed choices about who to elect or re-elect as their representatives.

The Parliamentary Performance Scorecard seeks to help in this task by providing Ugandan citizens with accurate, objective, and comprehensive information about the performance of their elected leaders. Because Parliament is the critical forum in which citizens' concerns are debated by their elected representatives, the Scorecard gives voters the information they need to assess how their Members of Parliament (MPs) perform. It is the ambition of the Africa Leadership Institute (ALI) that the Scorecard will contribute to greater transparency and, ultimately, greater democratic accountability in Uganda.

Building upon the pilot Scorecard of the final year of the Seventh Parliament, this Scorecard is distinctive in that it offers fair, reliable, and transparent measures of how MPs perform in plenary sessions and parliamentary committees. The methodology has been modified, grading criteria have been refined, and the scope of our measures has broadened as we have taken into account the lessons learned from the pilot study and the feedback received from MP's and the public.

The grades do not reflect a political agenda and no personal politics have swayed the scores assigned to individual MPs. Indeed, the scores are based on publicly available data collected systematically over the course of the year and can be checked and replicated by any individual wishing to do so.

The Parliamentary Performance Scorecard emphasises work in two arenas in which MPs execute their formal responsibilities as advocates for the interests of their constituents and the country: plenary and committee sessions of Parliament.

- Plenary Sessions. MPs are obligated to attend plenary sessions. These meetings provide members with an opportunity to present the views of their constituents, raise new issues, and debate the important challenges facing Uganda. For this reason, the Scorecard evaluates MPs on their attendance, participation, and influence in these plenary debates and provides information on the positions they take and the topics on which they focus.
- Committee Activities. Much of Parliament's work is conducted in committee sessions, where bills are reviewed and amended, budgetary decisions are made, and important oversight duties are performed. An approach that focuses only on what happens in plenary sessions alone runs the risk of not giving enough credit to MPs for the activities they undertake behind the scenes. To reflect this work, the Scorecard provides information on committee membership and reports data on the attendance and participation of MPs in committee meetings.

Of course, we recognise that an MP's responsibilities extend beyond the walls of Parliament. Specifically, MPs are expected to consult regularly with their constituents and local government representatives. Indeed, many MPs maintain offices and staff in their constituencies. AFLI is committed to adding measures to the Scorecard that capture the extent to which MPs engage productively and consistently with their constituencies. We examined a number of possible measures this year, but determined that the production of fair and transparent measures will require a much greater level of co-operation and dialogue from Parliament and individual MPs. While the information necessary for evaluating how MPs perform in Parliament itself is publicly available, the activities that MPs undertake in their constituencies are not systematically recorded. AFLI is, however, prepared to work closely with Parliament, local government officers, the Ministry of Local Government, and other civil society organisations to measure and evaluate these activities with an eye toward the next Scorecard.

The Parliamentary Performance Scorecard is the most ambitious attempt yet to open government to public scrutiny and to help voters realise their right to information about their elected officials. But we firmly believe that MPs will also benefit from this effort as constituents come to better understand the work that takes place in Parliament. Whereas MPs previously struggled to gain appreciation for their activities in Kampala and the constraints they face in their work, the Scorecard will provide them with a tool to better communicate what they do to their constituents. They will also be able, for the first time, to reflect on and improve their own performance based on the data provided here in advance of the next general election.

2 DATA SOURCES

Through this Scorecard, AFLI seeks to help citizens make sense of Parliament's activities. To do so, we build upon important steps that Parliament has already taken to make its activities transparent. Much of the information on which the Scorecard is based, such as the debates in plenary sessions, are recorded and transcribed into a collection of documents called the "Hansard." The Hansard has been carefully maintained by Parliament and has been made available publicly on Parliament's website. However, while the Hansard provides an excellent record of MP activity, it is difficult for most voters to access (one needs a computer) and understand (it is lengthy and available only in English). The Scorecard seeks to make this publicly available data comprehensible and accessible to the average Ugandan voter.

The Scorecard also draws on information that Parliament regularly collects, such as plenary and committee attendance registries, which are public information but which are not easily accessible to constituents. Some of these data are incomplete, leading to gaps in some of the measures. We are confident, however, that the quality of the data is improving over time and that gaps will be filled in future Scorecards. Finally, we also rely on some new sources of data. For the first time, committee meetings are being recorded and transcribed. These transcripts are essential and permit us to evaluate how MPs perform in committee.

Importantly, the Scorecard remains a work in progress. Because the Scorecard captures only the first session of the five-year term of the Eighth Parliament, there is substantial room for greater co-operation between AFLI, Parliament, and MPs to improve the measures contained in this report. Innovations such as comprehensive (and electronic) records of votes, regular reports on constituency visits by each MP to the Clerk, a public registry of MPs' local offices and staff, public dissemination of committee reports with signatures, and the provision of online access to attendance registers would all contribute to the push for transparency and democratic accountability in Uganda.

3 MEASURES

The data presented in the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard can be divided into two broad categories: performance data, which we use as the basis for an MP's overall grade and relative standing, and positional data, which records the issues on which MPs focus and the positions they take.

Performance data include MPs' attendance and participation in both plenary and committee meetings, as well as the influence they demonstrate in driving the business of Parliament forward in plenary sessions. Positional data report the focus of each MP, in terms of the topic and the scope of items he or she contributes to in plenary debate, as well as the positions an MP takes on business initiated by the Government and the Opposition sides. The performance data are used to generate grades for each MP. We do not generate grades based on the positions MPs take since although everyone favours better performance, people justifiably have different views on what positions MPs should take and which issues they should emphasise.

A sample scorecard is provided on the next page, and, in what follows, each measure is described in detail.

A. The profile provides information on the MP.

C. The performance scores show the components that are used to determine the overall scores and grades. For each item, the Scorecard first shows the raw score (the share of meetings attended; the share of debate that can be attributed to the MP; the share of debate that was influenced by an MP) and then provides a percentile to show how the MP performed relative to other MPs. This MP attended 27 of 89 sessions. This is better than 66% of MPs, but worse than 34% of MPs.

E. The (darker) red bars show the share of time each MP devoted to different substantive topics. The (lighter) gray bars show the extent to which parliament as a whole focused on these topics.

B. The boxes report grades for this MP in plenary and committee. The top sixth of MPs receive an A grade, the next sixth receive a B and so on.

The arrows show how well this MP performed compared to other MPs. The best MPs get a score of 100; the worst get a score of 0. A score of 78 (for example) means that this MP did better than 78% of MPs. However, 22% of MPs did at least as well as this MP. The average scores of Opposition and NRM members are marked for reference.

D. The marker shows the extent to which positions taken by the MP supported or opposed government positions. The average scores of Opposition and NRM members are also marked for reference.

F. The (darker) red bars show the share of time each MP devoted to national, regional, constituency, and special interest issues. The (lighter) grey bars show the extent to which parliament as a whole focused on these sectors.

A. MP Profile

The profile provides background information on the MP. Constituency and district are reported, along with the MP's status (Prime Minister, Vice President, Minister, Shadow Cabinet Member, Committee Chairperson or Backbencher) and Portfolio, which refers to the responsibilities the MP holds, where applicable, as a member of the cabinet or shadow cabinet. In addition, the profile provides the MP's party affiliation (if any) and lists the committees on which the MP serves. The MP described in the sample Scorecard, Ndaiba Barbara, is fictional and this sample Scorecard has been generated for illustrative purposes only. According to the Scorecard, the MP was elected to Parliament by universal suffrage to represent Kololo County in Nakasero District and holds a position as the Shadow Minister for East African Affairs. She is a member of the Democrat Party and sits on the Foreign Affairs and Public Accounts Committees.

B. Overall Grades for Performance

The performance section summarises the grades the MP received for plenary and committee performance.¹ Each summary reports the ranking of the average of the percentile scores achieved on the individual measures in each category.² The average score provides an easy way to combine the scores on the different sub-components. In essence, each component carries equal weight. Because this is not the only way to combine the sub-components, we encourage readers to examine each part of the aggregate score when they assess the performance of their MP.

The percentile scores should be interpreted as follows. If an MP has a score of 70 for plenary this means that the average of his rankings on each of the three component measures (attendance, participation, influence) was better than that of 70% of MPs. Overall, the MP on the sample Scorecard did well, receiving marks of "B" for plenary and "A" for committee. The system used to convert scores into letter grades is simple: the top sixth of MPs receive an A, the next sixth receive a B and so on. The lowest sixth receive an F. Grades of C and D are as average (in the middle of the distribution), while E grades are below average. The 10 MPs who performed the best in plenary sessions are listed in Table 1. The 10 best in committee are included in Table 2.

² Readers should note that the ranking of the average percentile scores is not the same as the average percentile score.

There are a number of issues to bear in mind when interpreting these results. First, the scores for the plenary and committee systems capture two distinct ways of engaging in parliamentary activities. We do not make a claim here about which of the two is more important, nor do we create an average score across these measures. It is worth noting though that performance on these two measures is positively related. On average, the same MPs appear to do well or poorly on both measures (the correlation between the scores is about 35%).

Second, in order to help the reader understand how his or her MP compares to other MPs, we provide the average score for members of the Opposition and the NRM. One should be cautious in comparing the average scores of the NRM to the average scores of the Opposition. The reason is that these differences can reflect two very different things. On the one hand, they may reflect real differences in effort and performance across parties. On the other hand, they may reflect the different advantages parties have in Parliament which permit them to perform better or worse on average on the measures used in the scorecard. For example, it is possible that government parties in general have more opportunities to introduce major legislation and thereby generate more debate, so better performance by the party in government could reflect this advantage rather than a difference in effort.

Similarly, one should think critically when comparing the scores of members with different status in Parliament. For example, while some Ministers surely do make more of an effort to perform well in Parliament than other members, these Ministers may also have certain advantages, such as the right or the obligation to present Government bills on the floor, that allow them to wield more influence than backbenchers in plenary sessions.

Finally, it should be noted that in approximately one third of cases, MPs do not have an overall grade for their work in committee meetings. This arises in cases in which, despite our best efforts, it was impossible to gather data on an MP's committee attendance and/or participation. In some cases, this is because committees did not maintain records of attendance. In other cases, these records may have been kept but were not systematically filed. This problem of missing data has been especially important for four committees: National Economy, Defence, Commissions, and the Business Committee. Also, although we have made great strides in recording committee activities, recordings were not made for all meetings during the first session of the 8th Parliament. Overall, we have committee transcripts for more than 25% of total committee sessions (a table describing the distribution of transcripts across committees is included in the appendix). The lack of data means that the effort of some MPs will be underrepresented; we expect, however, that this problem will be reduced in future years. Thus, readers should not interpret a missing score as an indicator of poor performance. It reflects quite simply the absence of data.

C. Disaggregated Performance Scores – Plenary & Committee

The overall plenary score is based on three measures: Attendance, Participation and Influence.

Attendance. The attendance measure records the percent of plenary sessions at which an MP was present during the period 18 May 2006 – 27 May 2007. This measure is based primarily on whether an MP signed the attendance book for a given session. In some cases, MPs failed to sign the log book even though they were present and spoke in session. In such cases, where there is evidence that the individual participated even though he or she did not sign the log book, we record the member as present. Readers should recognise that it is possible that some MPs were present but not given credit for it. This only occurs if the MP did not sign the attendance book and, in addition, did not contribute to the discussion on that day.

Further, we recognise that some MPs may be absent from Parliament on official business, for example attending the East African Parliament. In principle, these absences could be discounted in the attendance measure. However, this was not done in this year's Scorecard. At present, data on excused absences are not publicly available and the records currently kept on official leave do not distinguish leave for official business from excused absences of a personal nature.

There were a total of 89 sessions this year, and according to official records, the MP described in the sample Scorecard attended 25 of these. Her attendance rate is therefore 25/89, or 28%.

After we calculate these scores for every individual we convert them into a percentile. This allows voters to compare each MP's attendance to that of the rest of Parliament. Thus, although 28% attendance may seem low, in fact it is relatively high compared to other MPs. The percentile score indicates that this MP's attendance rate was in fact better than that of 66% of MPs (but poorer than that of 34%).

The top 10 performers in terms of plenary attendance are listed in Table 3. As can be seen in the table, these high performing MPs come from both NRM and Opposition parties and include both party leaders and backbenchers.

Participation. We measure participation in plenary sessions by counting the total number of lines spoken by an MP. All types of contributions are counted with the exception of committee reports presented in plenary sessions. The delivery of a committee report is excluded because it reflects the work of the entire committee and not simply that of the particular MP that delivers the report. In addition, all contributions are given equal weight (thus we do not weight points of order or questions any less than ministerial statements). Our approach to measuring participation is simple and transparent. We recognize that with this measure there is a risk, however, that MPs might be rewarded for talking too much! For that reason, voters should be sure to examine the more qualitative measures which provide information about what their MPs talk about.

In the example provided, the MP contributed 569 of the total of 117,651 lines spoken during the session. In fact this is a relatively high level of participation: the average contribution among all MPs is 352 lines, so 569 is well above average. This MP's percentile score is 80, meaning that only 20% of MPs participated at a higher rate.

The top 10 MPs in terms of participation in plenary sessions are listed in Table 4. This list is dominated by members of the cabinet and the shadow cabinet. One backbencher, Okecho William, however, makes the list with a participation rate almost four times greater than that of the average MP.

Influence. As we noted, the measures of attendance and participation are simple and transparent. However, they say little about the quality of an MP's participation. Assessing the quality of an intervention is difficult and is likely subject to dispute. We have adopted an approach that uses information about how other MPs react to a given intervention in order to estimate the importance of what each MP says. Unimportant or non-contentious issues are unlikely to produce significant reactions; more fundamental contributions around difficult issues are more likely to generate sustained discussion by other MPs. Put simply, in generating this measure we are assuming that Parliament is likely to spend more time on important issues than on unimportant ones. An MP's influence is thus a measure of the extent to which he or she directs the Parliament to issues of importance.

The influence measure is constructed as follows. We say that an MP has influenced a part of the debate whenever other MPs are responding to statements made by or items raised by that MP. In some cases, MPs may speak but their interventions do not generate any interest or responses from other MPs. In other cases, an MP's interventions may be so influential that they set the course of the subsequent debate. The influence measure reports the share of the debate that an MP has influenced in this way.

As an example, consider a case in which an MP raises a point of order regarding parliamentary proceedings and two other MPs respond, speaking three lines each, after which the first MP responds to the comments in four lines. In this case, the six lines of response by other MPs are counted towards this MP's influence score; these constitute parts of the debate that the MP has influenced. We do not, however, include the MP's own (direct or indirect) responses to the issues he raised. In this way, this measure allows us to capture the impact each MP has on debate in Parliament, while not rewarding them for speaking at great length on their own initiatives.

While this measure is likely to capture important aspects of influence, two caveats should be noted. The first is that it is possible that an MP makes an intervention that has a profound impact on the direction a discussion takes but does not provoke substantial direct reaction by other MPs. Such influential contributions will be underrepresented by this measure. Second, it is possible that many MPs are prepared to push a debate in a given direction; these MPs may then nominate one person to take the specified action. In such cases, this measure only attributes credit to the initiator and not to the group of MPs as a whole.

Table 5 lists the top performers on the influence score. As with the participation score, we see that NRM members figure prominently in this list. And indeed, whereas the top two scorers in the participation ranking were Opposition party members, the top 4 scorers for influence are all NRM members.

Committee Attendance. The disaggregated scores for committee work follow a similar logic to that for the plenary. However, the attendance measure for committees is slightly more complicated to construct because different MPs are members of different committees and so had more or less opportunity to attend. The method we use is the following. For each MP, we examined all of the committee meetings for which we have attendance sheets or transcripts and for which, based on committee membership data provided by the Clerk to Parliament, the MP ought to have been present.³ For these meetings, a member is recorded as being present if he or she is recorded on the attendance sheets or if he or she spoke at the meeting. The MP's score is then given simply by the share of these meetings at which the MP is recorded as being present.

³ While we use lists of committee members for the first session provided to us by the Clerk to Parliament, it is possible that there are inaccuracies in these lists or that MPs changed committee membership during the term. Such errors would be unfortunate, but we have done our best to use the most reliable information collected and provided to us by the Clerk.

As with attendance in plenary sessions, there is again a chance that some MPs will be recorded as being absent at some meetings even though they were present. But this will arise only if the official mechanism for recording attendance (in this case the attendance sheet) is incomplete or missing and the MP in question was silent throughout the meeting. As before, the Scorecard reports the relative performance of each MP (the percentile) as compared with the performance of all other MPs.

Table 6 lists the 10 MPs who performed best on committee attendance. While many of the MPs who did best on committee attendance are committee chairpersons, several of the top performers sit on the back bench.

Committee Participation. Participation in committee sessions is measured in a very simple way and one that is similar to that used in the plenary. The measure reports the share of lines each MP speaks in the committee meetings he or she is known to have attended and for which we have a transcript. The participation score is calculated as a share of total lines spoken at meetings attended by the MP, to account for the fact that some committees have much longer meetings than others. It is important to emphasise that this score measures participation only at those meetings that an individual attended. If an individual attends few meetings but participates very actively in those meetings, then this individual will get a low attendance score but a high participation score; his or her participation score will not be affected by the fact that he or she attended infrequently.

Table 7 lists the MPs aside from Ministers who scored best on the committee participation score; Table 8 reports the top performing ministers.⁴ The score reported is the lines spoken by the given MP as a share of the total lines spoken in all committee meetings at which he or she was present (whether or not he or she was a member according to the clerk's records). As with the other measures of participation and influence, we see that MPs with official roles – in this case committee chairpersons – dominate the list. The reader should observe, however, that three backbenchers and a Shadow Minister were able to make it into the top 10 in committee participation, despite the advantages and official responsibilities bestowed upon chairpersons.

⁴ We separate Ministers from those outside of Government leadership in the tables because Ministers are called to give official testimony before committees so often that they have a systematic advantage over non-Ministers on this measure. However, Ministers are included in our rankings for purposes of calculating the overall committee grade.

There is no influence measure for MPs' performance in committee meetings. This is because no parliamentary business is officially initiated in committees, and the debate in committee meetings is intended to be more informal.

Returning to the MP in our sample Scorecard, we see that she had a strong attendance record. Her attendance rate of 57% places her above 71% of other MPs. In addition, this MP participated very actively in those meetings that she attended. Her participation in meetings accounted for 232 out of 2884 lines, or almost 10% of the activity of meetings at which she was present. This rate is higher than that of 68% of MPs.⁵

D. Political Position

The next set of measures reported in the Scorecard captures aspects of the MP's position. While political party affiliation is often an important indicator of an MP's political views, it is limited in that it does not reveal differences among members of the same party. For voters to be able to make informed decisions at election time, it is important that they have access to more detailed information about the positions MPs actually take in Parliament.

⁵ In fact it is relatively rare that MPs do well on both measures of committee performance; some show up but participate little; others show up less but participate actively when they do. As a result, people who do well on both tend to have very high ranking average scores. In the case we are looking at here, the MP had scores of 71 and 68; the average of these is just 69½, however this average yields an overall percentile for committee work of 86.

The first measure of position — political position — provides an estimate of how frequently an MP sides with the Government or with the Opposition. For each statement made by an MP in plenary sessions, we generate a score ranging from purely pro-Government behaviour (1) to wholly Opposition behaviour (5). A score of 3 was used to represent neutral positions. The Scorecard reports the average of all positions taken by an MP in plenary session (for all MPs who took at least two positions during the year). A score close to 1 suggests that an MP typically took pro-Government positions, while a score close to 5 indicates that the MP typically took anti-Government positions. A score closer to the middle means either that the individual was typically neutral or that the person varied from item to item on how pro- or anti- Government the positions he or she took were.

Ideally, to measure position we would take advantage of recorded votes on bills. However, the absence of an electronic voting system (or any mechanism at all for recording votes consistently) in the Ugandan Parliament makes this impossible.

Instead, to measure position, we graded all new items introduced in Parliament as Government- or Opposition-sponsored (or neutral).⁶ Each time an MP spoke about one of these items, we recorded how strongly the statement supported a Government position (or opposed an Opposition position). For example, if the Foreign Affairs Minister proposes a resolution on the security situation in Sudan, those MPs who take a stance supporting that resolution are given a pro-Government score, because the item was initiated by a member of the Government cabinet. If an MP makes a statement objecting to the resolution, he receives an Opposition score for that item. If a response is ambiguous or takes no real stance on the item, it is graded as neutral.

⁶ Items were coded as pro-Government if they were introduced by a Minister, a Minister of State, or the Chief Whip of the NRM. Items were coded as pro-Opposition if they were introduced by the Leader of the Opposition or a Shadow Cabinet member.

Two steps were taken to help ensure the reliability of this measure. First, for each item we asked two distinct individuals to make independent evaluations of the positions taken in each speech. If these two coders disagreed we asked a third person, a referee, to make a final determination. Second, we asked the coders to record how certain they were about their assessments. In all cases, data were used only when the coders were able to make clear and confident determinations. It is possible, therefore, that some MPs took positions in favour of or against a motion but with insufficient clarity for the position to be registered in their score. Similarly, it is possible that many MPs took positions on items, but did not do so in statements on the floor of Parliament; in such cases, of course, their position on these issues is not captured in our score.

It is important to note that the ability of the Government to effectively set the agenda in Parliament has a major impact on the average position scores for all MPs. In fact, it is not the case that the average score is neutral or even that the average Opposition score is “pro-Opposition.” The reason for this is simple and relates to the way the measure is constructed. Many resolutions and other items of business introduced by Government are uncontroversial in their most basic form (even if some Opposition MPs, and even some NRM MPs, may object to the details of their implementation). Opposition MPs may therefore be scored as supporting a Government position simply because the issue at hand is not a divisive one. As a result, almost all MPs appear to fall on the pro-Government side of the political continuum. Readers should use the average position scores for NRM and Opposition MPs as the appropriate benchmark by which to judge where each MP falls on the political spectrum, rather than the extremes suggested by the Government-Opposition continuum.

Returning now to the example Scorecard, this MP’s position score is 1.75. Although this MP is a member of the shadow cabinet, the recorded position is on average pro-Government.

E. Topic

The business of Parliament is varied and cuts across a variety of topics. Different MPs choose to engage different issues, with some concentrating their energies on issues of governance, for example, while others focus on social issues. The topic section of the Scorecard reports the share of an MP's contributions that focus on each of eight important sectors: the economy and trade, internal security, foreign affairs, social issues, governance, infrastructure, environment and natural resources, and human development. The graph on each MP's Scorecard includes two pieces of information. The (darker) red bars provide information on the individual MP, while the (lighter) grey bars represent information about how much time Parliament as a whole spends on the different issues.

The "topics" graph for the sample MP shows that she focused on a diverse set of issues, concentrating more on social issues and internal security than Parliament as a whole, which spent much more time on human development, governance (including budget and oversight) and the economy. In addition, this MP spent much of her time on Foreign Affairs, a topic that falls within her mandate in the shadow cabinet.

F. Scope

A second way in which contributions differ across MPs is with respect to the scope of their contributions. To help voters understand the perspective of their MP, the Scorecard reports the percentage of each MP's contributions that is devoted to national, regional, constituency, and special interest issues. As a basis for comparison, the Scorecard also reports the share of parliamentary business devoted to each sector.

In general, we see that for most of Parliament, topics of national interest were of greatest concern, while those benefitting special interests produced the least debate. There are, however, differences across MPs. This MP's "scope" graph shows that, like the rest of Parliament, she spent the majority of her time on national issues and devoted relatively little time to regional, constituency, and special interest concerns.

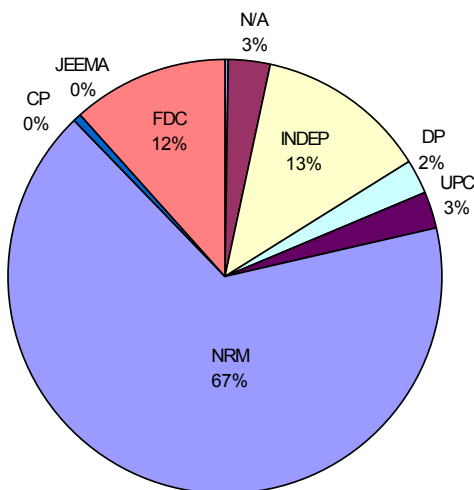

4 THE PERFORMANCE OF PARLIAMENT

The percentile scores that we provide for each MP should help voters understand how each MP behaves in relation to all other MPs. For a fuller appreciation of the meaning of these scores, however, it is helpful to have more information about how Parliament as a whole — and different groups within it — are performing.

Party. When one examines the data thoroughly, a number of important findings emerge. The first of these has to do with party membership. The beginning of the Eighth Parliament was an auspicious milestone for Uganda's crucial new experiment—a return to multiparty politics in the national legislature.

Under the individual merit system in place since the NRM took power in 1986, Ugandan MPs operated without the support or the constraints of formal party organisations. But parties now support candidates for elections and frame the debate on national issues, providing MPs with a like-minded caucus where they can seek support on issues important to their constituents and collectively set the parliamentary agenda.

It is natural then that Ugandan voters will look to see how different parties perform on the score card. Figure 1 shows the share of seats each party

This figure shows the distribution of (percentile) scores across three groupings of parties for the three plenary performance measures. Each distribution is represented by a box of different widths. The width of each box shows where 50% of the scores of a given party are concentrated. If a box begins at the 25th percentile for example and ends at the 60th percentile, this means that 50% of a party's members scored between 25 and 60. The red dot in the middle of each box denotes the median performance. If the dot is at the 60th percentile for example that means that half the party scored at least 60 while half scored no more than 60.

As is evident in the figure, Opposition members do better on average than members of the NRM and Independents across all three measures. Independents and NRM members score equally well on average. However, as the graph shows, *most of the variation takes place within parties, not across parties.*⁷ Many NRM members score better than Opposition members and vice versa. The implication is clear: party membership is a relatively poor predictor of performance. How well an individual does depends on his or her individual performance, and his or her place within a party, and not simply to which party he or she belongs.

Besides these major party blocks there are many other reference groups against which voters might wish to compare the performance of their representatives. For example, does a particular MP do well or poorly compared to other candidates from his region, or compared to other male candidates? Some MPs represent geographical constituencies while others speak for special interests; how does a particular MP compare to other candidates representing different types of constituencies?

The ability to make such contextual comparisons can let voters make fairer judgements than those that can be made based on overall scores alone. Further, an examination of the systematic differences between groups can help voters appreciate some of the structural features that make it easier for some representatives to score better than others.

Table 8 provides the information needed to allow voters to make these judgements. The table provides information on the behaviour of MPs across all of the disaggregated measures with breakdowns by party, ascension, status, gender and region.

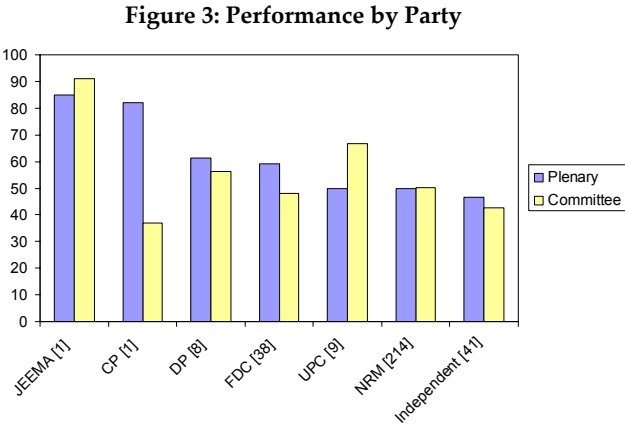

⁷ Statistically, the difference between average Opposition party performance and that of other members is significant at the 95% level. However this difference itself only accounts for 1% of the variation in MP performance.

The party breakdown (shown in aggregate in Figure 3) confirms what we have seen already. Opposition members on average do better than NRM members or Independents; in addition, it demonstrates that this pattern is consistent across all Opposition parties, although sometimes for different reasons. JEEMA, for example (represented by only one MP: Kyanjo Hussein), does especially well on participation but poorly on influence. CP (also represented by only one MP: Nampijja Lukyamuzi Susan) does less well on participation but does extremely well on influence. One can see from the table that the successful performance of the Opposition overall (relative to the NRM and Independents) arises from high participation scores, not from influence. Figure 4 illustrates the differences among parties in plenary and committee performance, with the number of MPs in each party listed after the party's name.

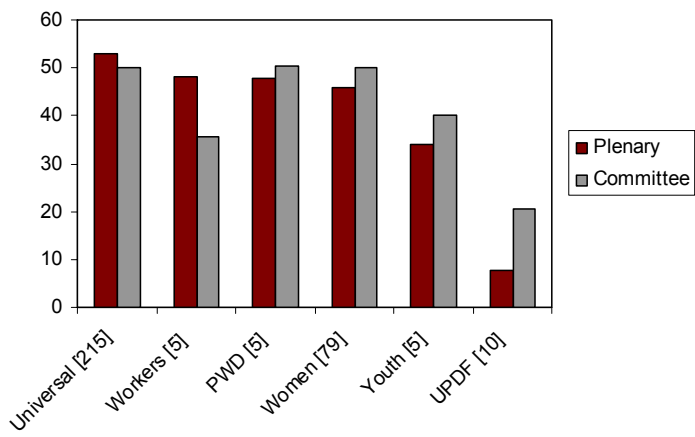

Ascension. A striking pattern emerges when performance is broken down by ascension. The data, presented in Figure 4, suggest a number of clear differences in performance as a function of ascension. Members elected by universal adult suffrage, who make up about 64% of MPs perform better on average than all other members. On average, their percentile placement is at least 5 points above those of the representatives for women, youth, the disabled, and workers. The lowest scorers, by a substantial margin, are the representatives of the UPDF. MPs representing the UPDF attend rarely, participate infrequently, and have no perceptible influence on debate according to our measures. Again, the interpretation of these patterns should be a subject for national debate. We do not make claims here about whether these patterns reflect differences in the quality of individual MPs or more structural features of parliamentary participation.

At the same time, parties put constraints on their members in Parliament, as has been demonstrated this year, for example, by the many news stories about NRM “rebel” MPs who have been reminded to voice their disagreements only behind the closed doors of the party caucus. Some have argued that it is in the caucus where the most honest debate occurs, where MPs may freely speak their minds, and where important decisions on party positions are made. The initiatives brought to the caucus by party members can then be reassigned to more senior or more “appropriate” MPs to be raised on the floor of Parliament. Critics suggest, however, that the net effect is to prevent backbenchers from voicing their thoughts and receiving credit for their initiatives in Parliament.

The data from this year’s Scorecard suggest that parliamentary business is indeed dominated by a small number of MPs, often leaders of their respective parties. As Table 9 shows, ruling party and Opposition leaders (a term that encompasses the Prime Minister, Ministers and Ministers of State, Shadow Ministers, the party whip, and the Leader of the Opposition) both score highly on average, although for somewhat different reasons. Opposition leaders receive high scores for their high levels of participation. Government leaders participate less on average, but are more influential when they do participate. The average cabinet or shadow cabinet member has a participation and influence score that is 3 to 5 times greater than that of a typical backbencher. Thus while it is entirely appropriate to reward MPs who are able to put themselves in a position of great influence within their party, voters should be aware that the participation and influence scores of backbenchers may not indicate a lack of energy or initiative.

However, although party membership and seniority do matter, the results also suggest that there is considerable space for members to excel based on their own energy. Table 10 reports the scores for the top ten backbenchers with respect to overall plenary performance. All are in the top 10 percent overall and two of them are in the top 1 percent. Backbenchers clearly can excel and this is true both for MPs from the NRM and the Opposition.

Gender. The Ugandan political system recognises the important role that women have to play in politics. We report scores for 79 women’s representatives, as well as a further 14 elected through universal suffrage and 6 who represent other special interests. The results in Table 8 suggest that on average women’s performance in Parliament is marginally lower than that of men. It is also clear, however, that this difference does not reflect any innate differences in the political capacity of women representatives since, as one can see in the table, once attention is focused on the most highly performing MPs — those elected by universal suffrage — the women do just as well, and on some measures better, than their male counterparts.

Region. A final question of interest is to know whether different regions are receiving better representation. Is it the case, for example, that parliamentary business is dominated by individuals from one particular region or that members representing some other region are underperforming? The evidence from this year's Scorecard suggests that on most fronts this is not the case. Surprisingly, MPs from the Central region score lower than all other MPs on attendance. These same members do slightly better, however, on influence relative to other members. Finally, members from the North and Central do somewhat worse on average in terms of their work in committee. Overall, however, all of these differences are relatively small and in most cases do not indicate any systematic differences across members as a function of the regions that they represent. This is an encouraging indicator of the inclusiveness of Uganda's parliamentary political processes.

5 ATTENDANCE: HOW DOES THE 8TH PARLIAMENT COMPARE TO THE 7TH?

Some readers might recall the pilot performance audit AFLI conducted at the end of the Seventh Parliament, released just before the parliamentary elections in 2006. Owing to a short timeline and limited resources, the audit reported on the performance of MPs based on a random sample of 67 sittings in plenary session, for which attendance and performance data were gathered.

Much discussion in the aftermath of the report's release focused on the poor attendance of many MPs at Parliament. It was pointed out that MP's are paid on a monthly basis under the assumption that they are actively participating in parliamentary sessions. A look at the data for the Seventh Parliament was disturbing in this respect. On average, MPs attended Parliament 27% of the time. There were some strong performers, such as Awori Aggrey (who attended 63% of the time), Wagonda Muguli John Wilson (60%), Balemezi Nalubega Lydia (52%), Nsubuga Nsambu (52%), and Sebuliba Mutumba Richard (52%). But only these five MPs (out of a total of 305) attended more than 50% of the sampled sessions. And 15 MPs attended not a single session in the sample.

Our data for the first year of the Eighth Parliament are more comprehensive. They cover all 89 sittings and permit a comparison of attendance between the Seventh and Eighth Parliaments. But the news is not especially encouraging. The average share of meetings attended during the first year of the Eighth Parliament is slightly lower than in the Seventh Parliament. In 2006-07, MPs attended 23% of plenary sittings on average.

Again, there were some good performers such as Kubeketerya James (57%), Okello Okello John Livingstone (55%), and Banyenzaki Henry (54%). In total, 4 MPs (out of a total of 330, not including the Speaker and Deputy Speaker) attended more than 50% of the sessions. As a small mark of improvement, only 3 MPs attended not a single session this past year.

6 LOOKING AHEAD: MEASURING CONSTITUENCY PERFORMANCE

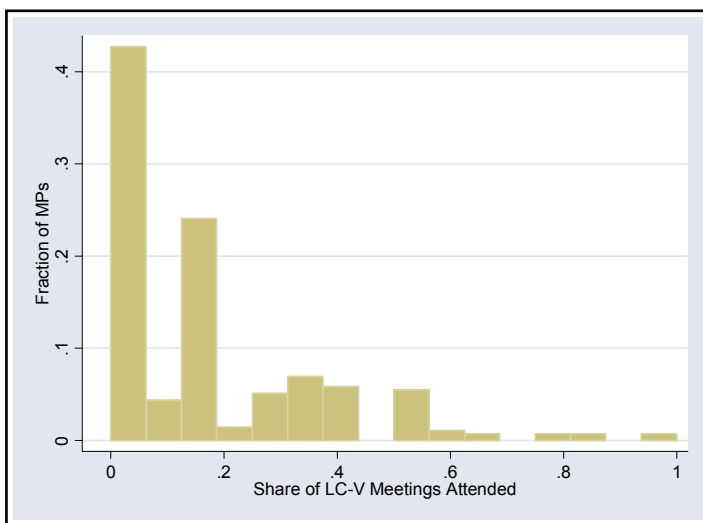

Members of Parliament report that, in addition to the work they conduct in Kampala, they spend a great deal of time in their constituencies participating in local government meetings and attending to the needs of community members. AFLI believes that MPs should be recognised for the efforts they undertake in their constituencies. However, without greater co-operation from Parliament and MPs themselves, we will not be in a position to measure these valuable activities fairly. While plenary and committee sessions are transcribed and made publicly available, no records are kept of the activities MPs undertake in their constituencies.

It is our ambition in next year's Scorecard to be able to report information about three dimensions of MP performance in the constituency. The first is the share of LC-V meetings attended by each MP. MPs are formally invited to attend these meetings so that they can better represent the interests of the local area in national debates. The second relates to constituency infrastructure. We seek to recognise those MPs who maintain a physical office and staff person in their constituency to attend to citizens' concerns. The final dimension covers constituency visits. Given the resources provided to MPs to travel to their constituencies, it is reasonable to assess MPs on how often they visit the voters they represent.

Although we cannot provide a comprehensive measure of constituency performance for 2006-2007, we were able to obtain measures of LC-V meeting attendance for those MPs with a geographic constituency. The data are based on LC-V attendance registers and meeting minutes across the 79 districts in existence during the sampled period.

As Figure 7 demonstrates, more than 40% of MPs representing a geographic area did not attend a single LC-V meeting in the six month period between June 2006 and May 2007. Moreover, attendance at LC-V meetings was low for both MPs in Government and those in the Opposition. On average, NRM MPs performed slightly better on this measure, with the NRM MPs attending about 18% of LC-V meetings, while Opposition MPs attended about 12% of the time.

We do not include this measure in the Scorecard because it represents only one of the many ways in which service to the constituency can be measured. Nonetheless, we report the results for each MP in a table so that voters are aware of how MPs are performing on this dimension. This table, organised by district, can be found in appendix A.

7 A NOTE ON THE SPEAKER, DEPUTY SPEAKER, AND EX OFFICIO MPs

While we have used these measures to assign grades to nearly all MPs, the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker have special responsibilities that prevent them from carrying out the duties normally required of MPs. In fact, the Rules of Parliament specifically prohibit the presiding officer from taking part in any parliamentary debate or voting on Bills before the House. Thus, it would be inaccurate to measure the performance of the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker on the same scale as that of all other MPs and would likely under represent the performance of the Speaker and Deputy Speaker, as was regrettably done in AFLI's pilot scorecard for the 7th Parliament.

However, while the Rules of Parliament may in many cases prevent the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker's from participating fully in the business of Parliament in a manner that would be reflected in this Scorecard, both of these Members are integral to the functioning of Uganda's legislature. Indeed, no session of Parliament may proceed until the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker, or an Assistant Speaker is present. Further, the presiding officer is charged with the responsibility of preserving order and decorum in the House, and he or she holds the final authority concerning questions of order and practice. Thus, while AFLI has decided not to include any measures of the performance of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker in this Scorecard, this should be seen not as a criticism of their performance, but rather as a reflection of their unique official roles in Parliament.

In addition, ex officio MPs – selected most often to fill Ministerial positions – have unique rights and responsibilities that allow them, in some cases, to perform in ways that other MPs cannot, for example by presenting official government business. For this reason, while we have graded the 13 unelected MPs on the same measures as the rest of Parliament, we do not include them in the percentile calculations, but instead rank them only against the other ex officio members.

8 LIMITATIONS OF OUR DATA

AFLI is committed to producing an objective, transparent, and nonpartisan evaluation of parliamentary performance. At the same time, the Scorecard cannot capture every relevant aspect of MP performance. Readers should keep a few caveats in mind when assessing the data reported here.

First, because AFLI strives to remain an objective observer of Parliament's activities, none of the measures in the Scorecard assess the relevance or quality of contributions made by MPs. Participation and influence scores are based only on the quantity of contributions made by those representatives and on the length of the debate following those contributions. Failing to maintain this impartiality would make it impossible to produce a purely objective evaluation. Similarly, our measures do not reward or penalise the particular positions MPs take on any issue. While we have coded contributions as "Government" or "Opposition", we do not assign a grade for these positions or claim that either perspective is superior.

Second, there are areas in which the data available to us are incomplete, making it difficult to produce a comprehensive Scorecard. First, some of Parliament's work is not captured in official records. For example, our effort to measure constituency activities is hindered by a lack of official data on offices, staff, and local visits, which Parliament does not collect. MPs' efforts to lobby ministries or to promote local development projects are also often informal and unverifiable. Even votes in plenary sessions go unrecorded, and the archives of committee reports with signatures are poorly maintained. In all of these areas, improved records would help us make our measures more precise.

In addition, some work is well documented but is conducted behind closed doors, and thus the public cannot access the records. We cannot know, for example, which MP first raised an issue in a party caucus meeting. Because parties caucus in secret, we are unable to include participation and influence at these conferences in the Scorecard. This points to one of the limitations of transparency — not all activity can be fully transparent and available to voters. In such instances in which voters cannot observe the activities of their representatives, they need to use other criteria — such as the extent to which ultimate policy outcomes reflect the voter's goals — to determine the effectiveness of their representatives.

Finally, we recognise that each MP's situation is different, which may make any attempt to compare the performance of all MPs imperfect. The constitutional requirements of certain MPs, such as the Speaker or Deputy Speaker, make them inherently incomparable to other MPs and prevent them from participating in the daily debate and fulfilling other duties that all MPs normally perform. The unique circumstances of individual MPs are infinitely varied and may affect their score in any number of ways. For example, each MP has a different relationship with his or her local councillors and other leaders, meaning that some MPs attend many LC-V meetings, while others choose to boycott the meetings in protest — or may simply not be invited. Still other MPs may take advantage of worthy opportunities to travel or otherwise work on behalf of their constituencies at the cost of committee or plenary sessions — for example, some MPs have been invited to represent Parliament at the Juba peace talks or at meetings of the East African Parliament. In each of these cases, we have attempted to collect data that would allow us to take these differences into account. In some cases, though this is simply not possible, as data are not available (excused absence lists, for example).

One anomaly we have taken pains to account for in the Scorecard relates to MPs who were elected through by-elections and those who were ousted or died during the term. It is not accurate or fair to compare MPs who have taken office during the Eighth Parliament or left office before the end of the session to MPs who have had a full term in office. Thus, MPs elected and ousted in by-elections and MPs who have died are scored against the full set of MPs, but only for the period in which the MP has been in office. For example, if an MP has served since April 2007 (i.e. for the last three months of the first year of the Eighth Parliament), his or her percentile scores will be based on a comparison of his or her performance to all other MPs based on that three month period alone.⁸

Despite these caveats, our measures comprehensively report on the constitutionally required activities of MPs. We do not, however, reward MPs for activities that are not a part of their legal mandate. For example, while many voters might choose to vote for an MP based on how often the representative attends local funerals or how much he or she provides in school fees for children in the constituency, these activities are not part of an MP's legal obligations, so it would be unfair and misleading to grade legislators on these actions.

In recognising that there are limitations inherent in any attempt to assess MPs according to consistent criteria, we emphasise again that the Scorecard is a tool to start a discussion about the best way to recognise the work of MPs and inform voters. We encourage voters, members of the media, and government officials alike to query their representatives on the scores laid out here. It is possible that some aspects of an MP's performance are not captured fully by our measures, and thus that some MPs have received lower scores than are warranted. Of course, it is also possible that some MPs have received scores higher than their overall performances merit. The Scorecard should not be taken in isolation, nor interpreted as encouragement to vote for or against any particular Members of Parliament. It should simply be taken for what it is — accurate and objective information on many of the activities that MPs perform on behalf of their constituents, and indeed of all Ugandans.

9 DISSEMINATING THE SCORECARD TO VOTERS

Assessing how MPs perform in Parliament through the Scorecard is only the first step. To fully develop the potential of the Scorecard as a mechanism for strengthening accountability in Uganda, AFLI is committed to getting this information into the hands of voters.

⁸ Due to the timing of our data entry, we did not collect information on Kithende Kalibogha Apolinaris, former MP for Bukonjo County East, who was replaced on November 14, 2006. In future, we will be collecting and reporting data on MPs ousted in by elections.

Because of language differences and the problems of illiteracy and a lack of access to television and radio in many rural constituencies, AFLI cannot rely on the publication of the Scorecard in Kampala alone. AFLI plans to visit voters directly in constituencies in an effort to deliver the information to those who ultimately cast the votes on election day.

The Scorecard will be produced on an annual basis — one for each year of the Eighth Parliament. Every year until the next parliamentary election, following the release of the Scorecard, AFLI will organise civic education workshops in a sample of geographic constituencies. These workshops will provide a forum in which representatives of AFLI can present the results of the Scorecard in a way that the local population can understand. MPs will be invited to attend the workshop held in their constituency in an effort to foster dialogue between constituents and MPs about the activities they undertake in Kampala.

Because we cannot possibly visit every constituency in Uganda, AFLI has identified the set of constituencies in which we will hold workshops through a fair and transparent process. First, we separated those MPs with a geographic constituency into three categories: those representing Government, those aligned with the Opposition, and those sitting in Parliament as Independents. Then, within each category, we ordered MPs from best to worst in terms of how they performed in plenary sessions. Finally, we selected every second MP from each of the three lists as an MP whose constituency we would visit.

Put simply, we selected the constituencies in which we would hold workshops through a fair lottery, ensuring that the number of workshops held in constituencies represented by Government, Opposition, and Independents is reflective of their relative representation in Parliament. In total, AFLI plans to visit 147 constituencies over the next four years. 97 (66%) are constituencies represented by the NRM, 29 (20%) are represented by an MP in the Opposition, and 21 (14%) are represented by an Independent MP.⁹ The constituencies we will visit are evenly spread around the country, with approximately a quarter each in the northern, central, eastern, and western regions. 96 constituencies are represented by men and 51 by women. The constituencies selected for civic education workshops are presented in Appendix B.

In addition to workshops for MPs representing geographic constituencies, AFLI expects to conduct dissemination efforts for special interest MPs as well. AFLI will organise meetings with the main interest group associations – the National Organisation of Trade Unions, the Army Council, and organisations representing youth and people with disabilities – at the regional or national level to inform members of these groups of the results of the Scorecard.

10 CONCLUSION

The founding principles of the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard are objectivity, transparency, and accuracy – values which we believe are embodied in this publication. But this is a living project that will grow and evolve over the remaining years of the Eighth Parliament and beyond. With this publication, we are setting an important precedent, an example that we hope civil society leaders in other countries, both in Africa and beyond, will find inspiring and useful. We are dedicated to producing the most complete and rigorous Scorecard possible every year, and in that spirit, we are open to the advice of MPs, party leaders, civil society, and the public at large. We welcome your critiques and practical pointers, and, as always, we are open to incorporating any additional data that may be made available to us in future years. With your help, we can make Ugandan democracy stronger.

⁹ 68% of elected MPs belong to the NRM, 18% are members of the Opposition, and 14% are Independents.

Appendix C: Technical Notes

The purpose of this appendix is to describe the exact methodology used to calculate every statistic or indicator developed as part of the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard.

1 Datasets

All of the measures provided in the scorecard are derived from one of two datasets: the plenary activities dataset (PAD) and the committee activities dataset (CAD). We describe each in turn.

1.1 The Plenary Activities Dataset (PAD)

The PAD contains data from two sources: official attendance logs and the plenary Hansard.

1.1.1 Attendance Log Data

The attendance logs are the official records of whether an individual MP is present in Parliament. An individual is recorded as being present in Parliament for a given day if his or her presence is recorded in the official log or if he or she has made an intervention of the floor of Parliament that has been recorded in the official Hansard. Only information on actual attendance and absence is used. In particular the PAD does not contain information about whether an absence was excused or not.

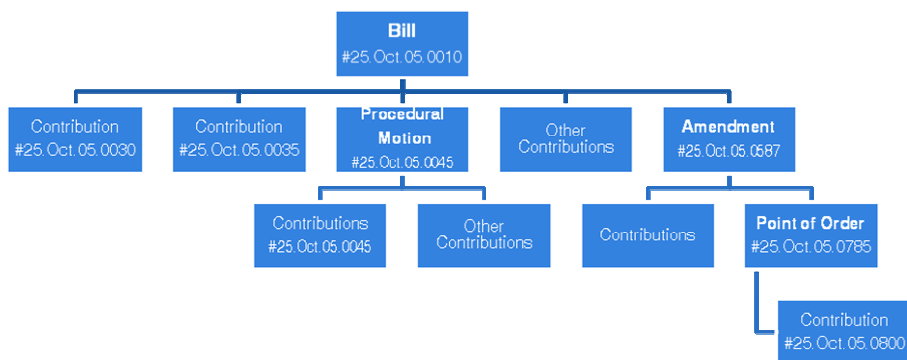

1.1.2 Plenary Hansard Data

Much of the information in the PAD is derived from coding of the official parliamentary Hansard by a team of enumerators. Every line of the parliamentary Hansard is read and entered into the PAD. The database records information about everything said on the floor of Parliament during plenary sessions. The process for coding the Hansard is as follows.

- a. Items: When an MP makes an intervention (proposes a bill, raises a point of order, etc.) this item is given a code and is recorded in the PAD. The name of the MP that makes the intervention is recorded along with a unique ID number for the item, and, where relevant, the ID number of the item it is referring to. In addition, we record the topic and the scope of the item (see paragraphs 2.4.2 and 2.4.3 below). In all cases in which the item under debate is something that MPs vote upon, the position taken by the MP is recorded (see paragraph 2.4.1).

- b. Line Number References. Importantly, for every intervention by an MP and for every item in the PAD we record the first and last lines in the Hansard to which the item corresponds. As a result it is possible to refer back to the original transcripts of Parliament to check every piece of data in the PAD.
- c. Structure of the Database: The PAD preserves information on the relation of each intervention to other interventions to which it refers, directly or indirectly. This is done by recording for each item the item (if any) to which it refers. As an illustration in the following chart, each node represents one MP's contribution in the Hansard, and one corresponding entry in the database. From this example it can be seen that items are recorded in a tree: for example, contribution #25.Oct.05.0800 itself refers to a point of order (contribution #25.Oct.05.0785) which in turn refers to an amendment (#25.Oct.05.0587) and a bill (item #25.Oct.05.0010).

1.2 The Committee Activities Dataset (CAD)

The Committee Activities Dataset contains data from two sources: official attendance logs and committee transcripts. Although we have worked with the most complete data available we note that for 2006-7 both of these data sources are incomplete. We hope that in future years these data will provide a complete account of committee attendance and activity.

1.2.1 Attendance Log Data

The attendance logs are the official records of whether an individual MP is present in committee meetings. An individual is recorded as being present in a given committee meeting if his or her presence is recorded in the official log or if he or she has made a contribution in the meeting.

1.2.2 Committee Transcript Data

All of the information on participation in the CAD is derived, again, from coding done by AFLI's enumerators. Every line of every committee transcript we have is read and entered into the CAD. The process for coding transcripts is as follows.

- a. Contributions: When an MP speaks in a committee meeting of which he or she is a member, this item is given a code and is recorded in the CAD. The name of the MP that makes the intervention is recorded along with a unique ID number for the item. Note that we go no further in the CAD; we do not, for example, record position or the item to which a contribution in committee refers.
- b. Line Number References. As in the PAD, for every MP contribution in the CAD we record the first and last lines in the transcript to which the item corresponds.
- c. Structure of the Database: The CAD is much simpler than the PAD. In fact, the database consists solely of a list of all contributions made by MPs during committee meetings.

2 Indicators

2.1 Score and Percentiles

2.1.1 A Note on Rankings and Percentiles

Most indicators are calculated in a three-step process. First, a raw score for each MP is calculated, such as the total number of lines that an MP spoke in all Hansards.

Second, each MP is ranked according to this raw score. Third, the rank is turned into a corresponding percentile. In all cases, each MP's rank is calculated as 1 + the number of MPs who have a higher raw score; thus, all MPs who tie in terms of raw score are given the same rank.

Example. If for some indicator two MPs' raw score is 10, one MP's score is 8, and three MPs' score is 7, their respective rankings would be 1, 1, 3, 4, 4, 4.

The percentile is calculated as

$$\text{Base Percentile} = 100 \times \frac{(\text{Total \# of MPs with Lower Raw Score})}{(\text{Total \# of MPs})}$$

Thus, a percentile score of 30 means that this MP did better than 30% of all MPs.

2.1.2 Averages of percentiles.

The overall scores (for plenary and committee performance) use information about the averages of individual percentile scores. The resulting scores differ from a simple average in two respects:

- First, the base percentiles are modified in order to ensure that the average percentile for a given score is exactly 50. Normally this is the case but it might not be if there are many ties; in such cases, the ties can result in a given score receiving a less than equal weight in the overall score. To prevent this from happening, we use modified percentile scores for each measure defined as follows:

$$\text{Modified Percentile} = 50 + 50 \times \frac{(\# \text{ of MPs with Lower Raw Score} - \# \text{ of MPs with Higher Raw Score})}{\text{Total \# of MPs}}$$

- Second, after the average of the modified percentiles is taken, the percentile rank of these averages is taken. This percentile of the average of the modified percentiles is then what is reported.

As a simple example, imagine that there are 10 MPs and they have scores on two issues as follows:

MP	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
Score on Item 1	1	1	1	2	2	3	4	5	10	10
Score on Item 2	10	9	1	1	4	4	3	6	8	10

In this case we can calculate the percentiles, the modified percentiles and the overall percentile scores as follows:

MP	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
Percentile on Item 1	0	0	0	30	30	50	60	70	80	80
Percentile on Item 2	80	70	0	0	30	30	20	50	60	80
Modified Percentile on Item 1	15	15	15	40	40	55	65	75	90	90
Modified Percentile on Item 2	90	75	10	10	40	40	25	55	65	90
Average Modified Percentile	52	45	13	25	40	48	45	65	77	90
Overall Percentile	60	30	0	10	20	50	30	70	80	90

As can be seen from the example, the overall percentile score differs in general from the average percentile. For example, MP 10 scored 80 on both issues reflecting the fact that he tied for first place on both. His average score would then be 80. However his overall percentile score is higher than this. He receives an overall score of 90 because, although he tied on both issue areas, he did better overall than both of the MPs with whom he tied. For other individuals, the overall percentile score is lower than their average; for example, MP 5 did better than 30% of the other candidates on both issues but only did better than 20% of people overall; this is because many of the people he did better than in some areas did much better than him in other areas.

2.2 Plenary Indicators

We now describe each of the individual components of the plenary score.

2.2.1 Attendance

Attendance is reported as the share of the 89 plenary sessions which an MP attended as given in the data described in paragraph 1.1.1. A percentile score is then calculated according to the method described in paragraph 2.1

2.2.2 Participation

The raw score for participation is the total number of lines each MP speaks in the Hansards. The raw score is then reported as a share of the total lines spoken in Parliament (117,651). A percentile score is then calculated according to the method described in paragraph 2.1. The only interventions that do not count towards participation scores are readings of committee reports. This is because committee reports are the responsibility of the entire committee that produced them and not simply of the individual that reads them. In addition, much of the key participation that leads to the production of these reports is already captured in committee scores.

2.2.3 Influence

Quantifying initiative in Parliament requires a system for comparing the level of initiative shown by introducing different items, including bills, resolutions, petitions, amendments, and points of order. Rather than assigning an arbitrary “influence value” to every item, AFLI assumes that the length of the debate on an item is a reasonable, if imperfect, indication of its significance. Thus, each MP’s raw influence score is given by the sum of the number of lines in the Hansard that are devoted to debating items he or she initiated. Excluded from this sum are lines the MP contributes directly to his or her own item. This exclusion is made in order to avoid double counting (an individual’s own interventions are already counted in his participation score) and to reduce the scope for manipulation (an individual cannot make interventions simply to increase his own influence score; rather, he must truly influence the debate). An individual’s intervention can count toward his own influence score only in the situation that he contributes to a discussion of an issue raised by another member that was itself raised in response to the MP's own issue. A percentile score is then calculated according to the method described in paragraph 2.1

2.3 Committee Indicators

Committee indicators are calculated using the CAD as follows.

2.3.1 Attendance

The committee attendance measure is given by the percent of all committee meetings of which this MP is a member (according to records provided by Parliament) where the MP's signature appears in the log book or where an intervention by the MP is recorded in a transcript. The denominator for this percentage is given by the number of meetings of committees of which the given MP was a member for which we have either log books or transcripts. Implicitly, then, an MP is counted as not being present in meetings for which transcripts exist but log books do not whenever that member's name does not appear in the transcripts.

2.3.2 Participation

The total number of lines spoken by each MP in committee meetings is not directly comparable, because each committee might have a different number of meetings, meetings of different committees might be different lengths, and some MPs are on more committees than others. Thus, MPs do not have equal opportunities to speak in meetings. In addition, we sought a participation measure that is analytically distinct from the attendance measure.

The raw score for committee participation is therefore the share of lines that each MP speaks at meetings at which he or she was present (whether or not he or she was a member of that committee. Thus the measure does not use information about meetings that the MP missed. The participation and attendance measures are thus distinct: attendance records the likelihood that an MP was present; the participation measure records the share of interventions at meetings that are due to the MP given that he or she was present.

2.4 Non-Graded Factors

In addition to the above indicators, all of which are combined into the MP's grades for plenary and committee work, information from the plenary Hansards is used to measure some factors that are not included in the grade.

2.4.1 Position

Position scores are generated through the following procedure.

1. During data entry, each MP's contribution to items that are voted upon (bills, amendments, etc.) is graded on a scale between 1 and 5, where 1 indicates that the MP strongly supports the item, 2 indicates weak support, 3 = neutral, 4 = weak opposition, and 5 = strong opposition. The enumerators also record their certainty about the position on a scale of 1 (totally uncertain) to 5 (completely certain).
2. Then, all new items for which we collected this position information are graded either "Government", "Opposition", or "neutral", according to the portfolio of the individual who introduced the item. If the individual is a cabinet member (Minister or State Minister), the NRM Chief Whip, or the Prime Minister, then the item is graded "Government". On the other hand, if the item is introduced by a member of the shadow cabinet, it is graded as "Opposition". Finally, if the initiator is neither a member of the ruling party leadership nor of the shadow cabinet, the item is graded "neutral". In exceptional circumstances, such as clearly partisan items proposed by backbenchers, AFLI staff may assign a Government or Opposition position to an item that might otherwise, under the above rules, be graded "neutral".¹
3. The position information on all contributions to Opposition items is then inverted (5 becomes 1, 4 becomes 2, etc). Doing this ensures that a score of 1 means either "supportive of a Government position" or "opposed to an Opposition position".

4. We then discard information if (1) the items to which an intervention refers are themselves neutral or (2) if the MP takes a neutral positions or (3) if any of the three enumerators' certainty about his or her grading is below 4 on a scale from 1 to 5 or if the average of the first two enumerators' certainty is below 4.² This conservative approach is intended to ensure that only data for which we have great confidence is used for these measures.
5. Finally, we average each MP's remaining positions to get their raw position score. We only report these scores in the final scorecard if we have two or more position data points for a given MP.

MPs are then graphed on a continuum between 1 and 5, where 1 = strong Government support and 5 = strong Opposition support. Rank and percentile are not used. However, median positions for Government, Opposition, and Independent MPs are marked on the graph for each member.

2.4.2 Topics/Sectors

Each item in the PAD is associated with one or two of the following topics or sectors.

- The Economy
- Environment and Natural Resources
- Foreign Affairs
- Governance
- Human Development
- Infrastructure
- International Security
- Social Issues

² Each Hansard is graded by two different enumerators, then those separate databases are combined into the Master database, with another enumerator examining and reconciling any discrepancies between the two. For a position score to be counted on an individual item, the average of the first two enumerators' certainties must be 4 or higher, and the final certainty in the master database must also be 4 or higher. The position in the master database is used, and the positions entered by the first two enumerators are discarded.

In many cases, the assignment of items to categories was clear, but in some cases, judgements were unavoidable. For example, one could discuss unemployment as a social issue, emphasising education and social programs to help the unemployed, in which case it would fall under Human Development and Social Issues. One could also discuss unemployment from an economic perspective, and advocate expanding manufacturing to solve the problem, in which case it would fall under Agriculture, Industry, and Trade. To handle such situations, a single item may be classified as pertaining to up to two (but not more than two) categories.

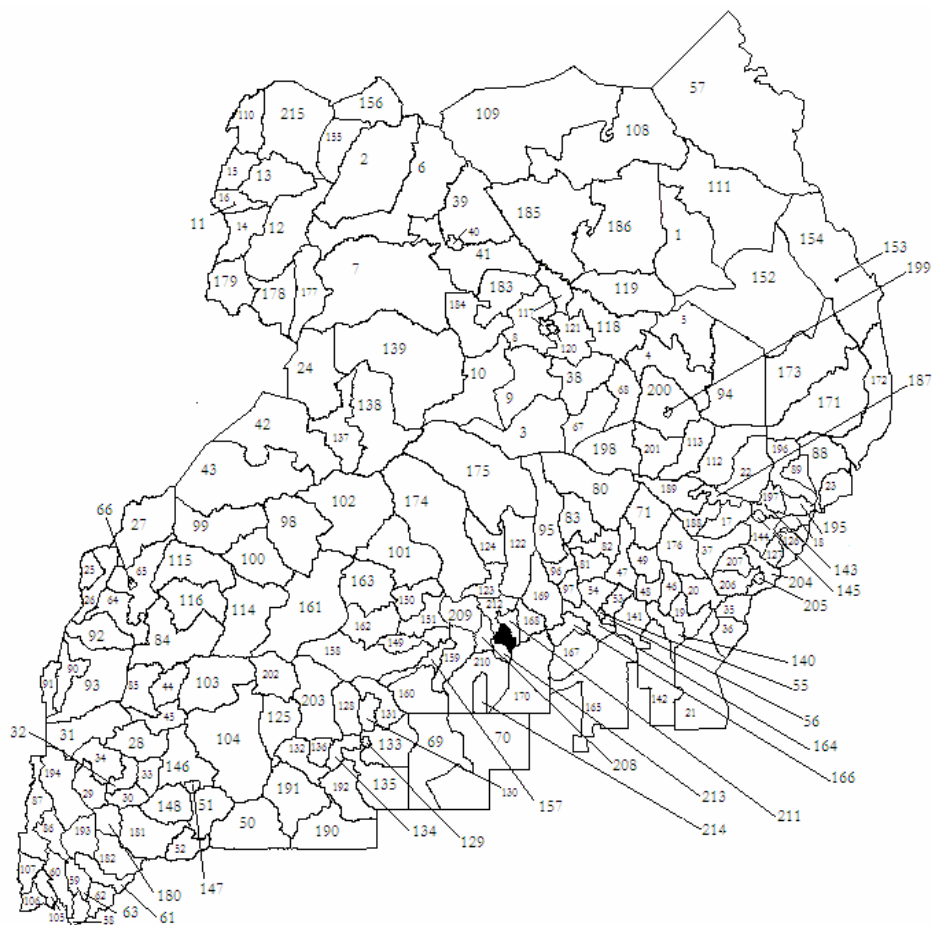

In cases in which the item refers to another item, the topic or scope is typically inherited from that other item with exceptions made whenever in the course of a debate there is a substantial change in topic.

The total number of lines each MP contributed to items of each topic is then summed with lines being given half weight for a given topic in cases in which the lines refer to two topics. The share of interventions of a given MP on a given topic are then calculated and compared to the overall parliamentary share.

2.4.3 Scope

Finally, each item in the PAD is assigned a scope. The scope of an item is a measure of how many people it is intended to affect directly, and ranges from “constituency” to “national”. Some items will affect only a single individual, or may be limited to a single MP’s constituency. Others will affect a region of Uganda or the whole country. An item which affects not a geographical region but a particular industry, on the other hand, has a “special interest” scope. While an item that affects an industry or an individual directly may be thought to benefit the nation indirectly, such indirect effects are not counted for this measure; in such cases we note only those that are directly affected. The total number of lines each MP contributed to items of each scope is summed, and the scopes of the items the MP contributed to are compared to the parliamentary average in a bar chart.
