ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

AFLI is indebted to those who have assisted us in developing, refining, and strengthening the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard.

Over the course of the past year, we have benefited enormously from consultations with Parliament. Our discussions with the senior leadership of each political party and the Parliamentary Commission have greatly influenced the direction of this year's Scorecard, resulting in substantive changes and significant improvements. AFLI would also like to thank all of the Members of Parliament who took time out of their busy schedules to attend our consultative workshops in April 2008 and May 2009, assisting us in our efforts to make the methodology and information in the third incarnation of the Scorecard even richer than in previous versions. A number of MPs also shared their comments with us in private forums; we have made every effort to respond to the issues they raised.

The Scorecard for the 8th Parliament would not have been possible without the ongoing and substantial support of the Royal Netherlands Embassy. AFLI wishes to thank Ambassador Jeroen Verheul in particular for his vocal support of the Scorecard and for speaking at the launch of the Scorecard last year. We would also like to thank Joyce Ngaiza and the rest of the staff at the Royal Netherlands Embassy for their help in making the Scorecard a success.

We are grateful also to those who have supported this project from its beginnings as a pilot project during the final year of the 7th Parliament. The United States Department of State's Human Rights and Democracy Fund provided timely funding to get the Scorecard off the ground.

Several offices and agencies of the Government of Uganda (GoU) have provided invaluable assistance in our data collection efforts. We are grateful to the Office of the Clerk to Parliament and the staff of the Parliamentary service. We also thank the members of the Parliamentary Commission for their valuable time and insightful comments during our consultations. We are grateful to the many Members of Parliament who responded to our survey request and the District Chairpersons, clerks to council and staff, and the LC-I, LC-II, and LC-III staff for their assistance in providing us with constituency information, which enabled us to include new and valuable information in this year's Scorecard.

In addition to the institutional support of the aforementioned bodies, we appreciate the tireless efforts of the many people and organizations who worked with AFLI to make this year's Scorecard a success. We are grateful to Simon Osborn and the contributing governments of the Deepening Democracy Program for their financial support and substantial efforts to ensure that the Scorecard is seen through to its conclusion, and we look forward to a long relationship with them. AFLI is also indebted to the National Democratic Institute for its invaluable assistance in the first constituency workshops. Director/Principal Consultant M.J. Robert Kintu and Fred Mubiru of Projset Consultants provided critical advice on the design and implementation of the Scorecard, and the research assistants seconded by Projset – Byamah Hillary, Gwoke Joachim, Kasirye Julius, Musunga Douglas, Okello Francis, and Sebowa Solomon – contributed not only hours of often tedious computer work, but also their critical insight into the Ugandan political process.

We would also like to thank the people from AFLI who have made this project possible. The members of the Executive Board of AFLI were, in their various capacities, crucial in shaping the trajectory of the project. Director of Finance and Administration Tobias Onweng and Executive Assistant Patrick Muhumuza provided much needed guidance and support. We greatly appreciate the strategic counsel and technical support provided by the senior external advisers to the project, Professor Macartan Humphreys of Columbia University and Professor Jeremy Weinstein of Stanford University. Nathan Falck and Jeffrey Love of Stanford University and Jessica Harris of Yale University served as Project Coordinators and we thank them for their superb and tireless work on behalf of the project. Thank you to Jeffrey Krutz of Columbia University for preparing the maps of parliamentary constituencies from data made available by the Uganda Bureau of Statistics.

In addition, we thank Hon. Kyanjo Hussein and Hon. Sempala N. Nabilah for their cooperation in and support of our pilot constituency dissemination workshop. We owe a debt of gratitude to the approximately 400 people who helped to make the pilot constituency workshop a success by attending and actively participating in it. Special thanks to Makindye West LC-III Chairman Kalungi Kirumira M. and Vice Chairman Siraje K. Lubwama, workshop moderator Pastor Kagolola Ibrahim, and all of the participants in the workshop panel for helping to organize the workshop and keep it running smoothly.

The Scorecard report would not be as polished and complete without the useful comments of our peer reviewers: Arthur Larok of the NGO Forum, former MP Hon. Wandera Martin, Director of Planning at Parliament Dison Okumu, Director/Principal Consultant of Projset Consultants M.J. Robert Kintu, Martin Hoxer of DANIDA, and Simon Osborn of Deepening Democracy Program.

We are grateful also to the many media houses and radio and television talk shows which reported on and guided the public debate about the contents and merits of the last Scorecard. Their hard work ensured that the vital information contained in the Scorecard reached voters around the country. We hope that they will continue to empower voters in their civic engagement with Parliament.

Finally, we would like to extend a thank you to the people of Uganda, whose comments and feedback have allowed us to continue to improve our methodology, and for whom this project is ultimately designed. We only hope that you find some use in its pages.

FOREWORD

To measure the performance of MPs, one must first be clear about the roles of an MP. In Uganda the expectations the public has for their representatives are often at variance legal expectiations of MPs.

One goal of the Scorecard is to help align voters' expectations of their MPs with the legal expectations of MPs. Voters who understand what their MPs should be doing are better able to gauge how well their MPs are performing. The Scorecard seeks to empower and educate voters by both helping them to understand what their MPs should be doing and giving them the tools they need to assess whether or not their MPs are doing these things. In addition, the Scorecard helps MPs to objectively assess their own performance during the session.

Many Ugandans wrongly expect MPs to single-handedly develop their constituencies, attend fund raisings and funerals, and pay school fees for their children. However, MPs cannot, and are not legally expected, to single-handedly transform their constituencies. They are expected to act as representatives of their constituents, ensuring that their voices are heard and their needs are met by the government.

By law, MPs must take on four different roles. They must participate in: 1) legislative activities, 2) oversight activities, 3) constituency activities, and 4) party activities. By participating in the legislative process, MPs give their constituents an indirect role in shaping important policies which affect their lives. Article 79 of the Constitution of Uganda empowers Parliament to make laws on any matter for peace, order, development and good governance of Uganda. MPs are also supposed to act as effective watchdogs over the cabinet and bureaucracy so that neither abuses its responsibilities to Ugandans generally. Parliament is empowered in this endeavour by Article 164.

In addition to acting as legislators and watchdogs, MPs play secondary roles in their constituencies and in their parties. To represent their constituents effectively, MPs must find out which issues are most important to their constituents and what stances their constituents would like them to take on these issues. They must spend their Constituency Development Fund wisely and in ways that benefit the constituency as a whole, rather than specific individuals. MPs must attend district-level meetings and ensure that the needs of their constituents are being met. Finally, MPs must devote a great deal of time to providing advice and non-financial assistance to individual constituents.

MPs of all parties have a role to play in fostering and protecting Ugandan democracy. All MPs, from all parties, should engage in genuine and critical debate in the interest of the country on all issues within their party caucuses. The contribution of Opposition Members to the legislative and policy process is especially critical. Opposition Members' input, while critical, often results in substantive improvements. The participation of Ruling Party Members of Parliament in surveillance activities can highlight areas in which government performance genuinely is satisfactory or in which it has fallen short.

Finally, MPs are expected to play a number of concomitant roles, including: calling press conferences to express their people's views and interests, lobbying ministers and bureaucrats on behalf of their constituents, taking part in local events and official functions in their constituencies, and speaking on behalf of the country in the interests of Ugandan citizens at international and national forums.

It is the goal of the Scorecard Project to provide voters with comprehensive and accurate information about the performance of their MPs so that they may better monitor them and ensure that their elected representatives fulfill their responsibilities as MPs. Beyond describing the performance of individual MPs, the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard assesses the performance of Parliament in general. Specifically, the report describes patterns of performance by party, ascension, gender group, and region in an effort to help voters understand how the institution itself is functioning and how their MP compares with others in the country.

The Parliamentary Scorecard is an innovative project that we hope will help to strengthen democracy in Uganda. It does not aim to find fault with MPs or Parliament, but instead to help Parliament serve its citizens better. This report covers the second session of the 8th Parliament of Uganda. The Scorecard will be produced annually, culminating in a consolidated report at the end of five years. As we perfect our research capabilities, we plan to do a Scorecard for the Judiciary and other authorities.

On behalf of the AFLI Board, I invite you to read this report, and it is my sincere hope that you find it useful in driving continued democratic reforms in Uganda.

Thank you,

Elly Karuhanga

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Democracies are premised on the idea that citizens can hold their leaders accountable for their actions by voting for or against them in regular elections. However, in order for this ideal to be realized, citizens must possess a minimum amount of information about their leaders' performance.

The Parliamentary Scorecard Project seeks to provide Ugandans with this critical information, thereby empowering them to monitor their elected representatives and to make informed choices at election time. The first Parliamentary Performance Scorecard for the Eighth Parliament, released on 13 December 2007, met with broad acceptance among MPs, civil society, the press, and the public. It provided voters with valuable information, won widespread coverage in the press, and fostered a national dialogue about the roles and performance of MPs. The Scorecard was also carefully studied by Parliament.

At the request of a number of Members of Parliament, in April 2008 AFLI held a workshop with 75 MPs and many members of civil society and the press to discuss possible reforms to the Scorecard. Following the workshop, AFLI revamped the Scorecard methodology to include reforms suggested by members of Parliament, civil society, academia, the media, and others. This year's Scorecard is the culmination of months of dialogue, consultation, and revision. It is the most comprehensive and accurate Scorecard AFLI has produced yet, and it will serve as the model for all future iterations of the Scorecard.

Like last year, the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard reports on attendance and participation in plenary sittings and committee meetings, as well as the extent to which MPs influence the debate in Parliament. The Scorecard also includes new measures of performance in two key areas:

- Constituency Activities. The Scorecard reports detailed information about each MP's activities in their constituency and assigns each MP a grade based on his/her constituency work. New measures include an assessment of MP accessibility, constituency infrastructure (i.e. office and staff), LC-V attendance, and Constituency Development Fund accounting.
- MPs' Reputation. In response to concerns about the limitations of the Scorecard in capturing the quality of work done by MPs and to the demands of MPs to play a role in the Scorecard data collection process, the Scorecard now includes a new set of measures which record subjective assessments made by MPs of one another's performance. These measures are designed in a way that prevents assessments from being skewed by party preferences.

In addition, the new Scorecard reflects the following reforms to our existing measures:

- Committee Reports. In previous versions of the Scorecard, an MP who presented a committee report received participation and debate influence credit for doing so. However, many MPs objected that although the reports are generally presented by the chairperson of the committee, they represent the collaborative effort of the entire committee. Therefore, this year's Scorecard awards participation credit to every MP who signed a committee report that is presented on the floor. Where we were unable to obtain a committee report that was presented in plenary, only the MP who presented the report received credit for it.
- Committee Transcripts. With the help of Parliament, we were able to improve our committee data collection in this Scorecard. In the last Scorecard, we could not provide complete committee data for many MPs because we were only able to obtain 25% of the committee transcripts from Parliament. This year we collected about 40% of the committee transcripts and were thus able to provide a more complete Scorecard for more MPs. Going forward, we would welcome a partnership with Parliament to ensure that all discussions in committees are recorded.
- Separating Ministers from Backbenchers. Responding to the concern that ministers are afforded greater opportunity to participate in plenary sittings than are backbenchers, we now report the top performers in each category disaggregated by frontbencher and backbencher status. In addition, where overall grades are provided, we indicate on the Scorecard itself the average score of frontbenchers and backbenchers to facilitate comparison.

These reforms have helped to make the 2007 – 2008 Scorecard more comprehensive, accurate, and informative than previous versions of the Scorecard. We could not, however, institute every reform suggested to us. There were a number of reforms that we debated internally but ultimately decided could not be implemented either because of a lack of data or because we feared compromising the objectivity, transparency, and accuracy of the Scorecard. These are discussed in greater detail within the report.

This report provides a thorough explanation of every measure on the Scorecard. It includes tables of the top ten backbenchers and ministers, shadow ministers, and committee chairpersons for most measures. It also examines Parliament's overall performance and the performance of different subgroups within it. It compares Parliament's performance this year to its performance last year. Finally, the report provides the full set of scores for each MP, presented on individual Scorecards.

The key findings from our new measures of constituency performance include the following:

- MP Accessibility. MPs performed relatively well on a measure of accessibility that gauged the ability of constituents to contact their MP. We used an innovative approach to generate a direct, independent and reliable measure of accessibility. We visited every constituency in the country, randomly sampled five constituents, and provided them with a small financial incentive to spend up to a day trying to locate a phone number for their MP. From this we generated a score ranging from 1-5 indicating the number of constituents that were able to obtain the MP's phone number in the course of one day. The average MP scored 3.5 out of 5 meaning that between 3 and 4 of the constituents were successful. An impressive 28% of MPs received perfect scores for accessibility. However, in seven constituencies, not even one of the five participants was able to obtain a correct phone number for their MP.
- Constituency Infrastructure. The majority of constituency MPs and district woman representatives maintain both local offices and political assistants. We were able to verify offices for 65% of MPs in our sample, and we were able to verify political assistants for 68% of MPs in our sample. Nonetheless, although MPs are provided resources to facilitate the hiring of an office and staff person to handle constituent issues, nearly one third of MPs do not have a verifiable constituency infrastructure of this form.
- LC-V Attendance. Attendance at LC-V meetings by MPs is very poor. According to our data, about 69% of constituency MPs and district woman representatives never attended a single LC-V meeting in 2007 – 2008, and only 13 MPs attended more than half of their district's LC-V meetings.
- CDF Accounting. The vast majority of MPs (308 out of 321) officially accounted for their CDF funding. Readers should note however that our records indicate which MPs have accounted for this funding but not whether these accountings have been certified by the Auditor General.

With respect to Parliament's overall performance, a number of results stand out:

- First, although members from Opposition parties tend to perform better on average in plenary than NRM or independent MPs, they do slightly worse on committee and constituency measures. While members of Opposition parties earn, on average, a plenary percentile score of 61%, NRM members score only 50% on average. However, in committee, the average Opposition MP gets a percentile score of 50% while the average NRM MP gets a score of 54%. Similarly, in constituency, Opposition MPs receive, on average, a percentile score of 43% while NRM MPs receive an average score of 48%.

- Second, frontbenchers and party leaders (especially in the Opposition) perform better in plenary and committee on average than backbenchers. Frontbenchers performed especially well on measures of participation and influence in plenary session, although the average frontbencher's overall plenary percentile is nearly equal to that of the average backbencher. This is because their overall score (especially among government ministers) is brought down by relatively poor attendance at plenary sittings. However, the average frontbencher's committee percentile is well above that of the average backbencher. While backbenchers earn an average committee percentile score of 48%, frontbenchers earn an average score of 63%. Nonetheless, it is still the case that individual backbenchers can score very highly. Indeed, some of the highest scoring MPs in Parliament are backbenchers.
- Third, on average, male MPs do slightly better than female MPs in Parliament. This is true across nearly all of the measures. Moreover, unlike last session, this trend holds true regardless of whether the women were elected as constituency MPs or as district woman representatives. On average, male MPs outperform female MPs by at least 4 percentage points in plenary, committee, and constituency. However, many individual women did extremely well and a few top the Top 10 tables for various measures.
- Fourth, there are important differences across MPs based on how they ascended to their seats. On average, constituency MPs performed well, those elected to represent special interests and women did less well, and those MPs that represent the army performed particularly poorly.
- Finally, on average, MPs from the West perform better overall than other MPs. Moreover, unlike MPs from other regions, they perform consistently well across plenary, committee, and constituency measures. MPs from the East perform extremely well in committee measures and relatively well in plenary measures, but they perform poorly in constituency measures. Although MPs from the North perform relatively well in plenary, they perform less well in committee and constituency. MPs from the Central region, despite performing relatively well in some individual measures, earn relatively low average overall performance scores for plenary, committee, and constituency. Although their constituencies are closer to Parliament than those of other MPs, on average, MPs from the Central region perform worse on plenary attendance than MPs from other regions. It is nonetheless the case, though, that MPs from all regions can and do perform well.

In addition to presenting results from this year's Scorecard, the Scorecard report offers a comparison of last session's scores and this session's scores. The most important findings include:

- Better Plenary Attendance. Average plenary attendance is significantly higher than it was last year. While average plenary attendance was just 23% last year, this year it climbed to 45%. Although fifteen MPs did not attend a single plenary session last year, this year, that number dropped to four. Moreover, while only four MPs attended over half of the plenary sittings last year, 136 MPs attended over half of the sittings this year.
- No Rise in Plenary Participation. On average, plenary participation is slightly lower this year than in the first year of the Eighth Parliament. This is in part due to the fact that there were 9 fewer sittings in which MPs were able to participate this year. In the second session, fewer MPs participated and when they did, they spoke less on average than MPs during the first session. While 88% of MPs spoke at least one line in 2006 – 2007, only 84% of MPs spoke at least one line in 2007 – 2008. However, this year, the top-performing MPs managed to outperform last year's top performers despite having 9 fewer sittings in which to participate.
- Increasing Debate Influence. Debate influence scores are significantly higher this year than last. The top performer this year scored two times higher in debate influence this year than last year. In fact, the top five performers in debate influence this year all scored higher than the top performer last year. This suggests that MPs are engaging one another's prior comments more systematically in parliamentary debate.
- No Rise in Committee Attendance. Our measures suggest that committee attendance in 2007 – 2008 is slightly lower than attendance in 2006 – 2007. Although the top performers in committee attendance in 2007 – 2008 outperformed the top performers in 2006 – 2007, the worst performers in 2007 – 2008 attended fewer meetings than the worst performers during the previous session. In 2006 – 2007, eight MPs attended zero meetings of their committees; in 2007 -2008, that number nearly tripled.
- A Decline in LC-V Attendance. LC-V attendance has worsened since last year, with the average rate of attendance dropping from 16% to 10%. About 69% of constituency MPs and district woman representatives never attended a single LC-V meeting in 2007 – 2008 (as compared to just over 40% in 2006 -2007), and only 13 MPs more than half of their district's LC-V meetings.

Dissemination and Outreach. In addition to providing a description of how MPs perform, the report also describes AFLI's plans for dissemination of the Scorecard. Assessing how MPs perform in Parliament through the Scorecard is only the first step. To fully develop the potential of the Scorecard as a mechanism for strengthening accountability in Uganda, AFLI is committed to getting this information into the hands of voters. Because of language differences and the problems of illiteracy and a lack of access to television and radio in many rural constituencies, AFLI cannot rely on the publication of the Scorecard in Kampala alone. AFLI plans to visit voters directly in constituencies in an effort to deliver the information to those who will ultimately cast votes on election day.

Beginning this year, and continuing every year until the next parliamentary election, AFLI will organise civic education workshops in a large sample of geographic constituencies. These workshops will provide a forum in which representatives of AFLI can present the results of the Scorecard in a way that the local population can understand. MPs will be invited to attend the workshop held in their constituency in an effort to foster dialogue between constituents and MPs about the activities they undertake in Kampala. A first pilot workshop was held on 13 June 2008 in Makindye West. AFLI expects to continue to hold several workshops every month until the next parliamentary election.

With the primary campaigns for the 2011 election coming up next year, these workshops will provide a crucial and timely mechanism for getting information into the hands of voters. Unfortunately, we cannot possibly visit every constituency in Uganda, so AFLI has identified a set of 147 constituencies in which we will hold forums over the next two years. A list of constituencies in which forums will be held is in Tables 1 and 2 of the report. We call upon all MPs to attend any workshops taking place in their constituencies and to use the workshops as a venue to discuss their work in parliament with their constituents.

The founding principles of the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard are objectivity, transparency, and accuracy – values which we believe are embodied in this publication. But this is a living project that will grow and evolve over the remaining years of the Eighth Parliament and beyond. With this publication, we are setting an important precedent, an example that we hope civil society leaders in other countries, both in Africa and beyond, will find inspiring and useful.

REPORT ON THE PARLIAMENTARY PERFORMANCE SCORECARD

1 PURPOSE

Democracies are premised on the idea that citizens can hold their leaders accountable for their actions by voting for or against them in regular elections. However, in order for this ideal to be realized, citizens must possess a minimum amount of information about their leaders' performance. A well-informed public is a prerequisite to any functioning democracy.

Uganda has made great strides in creating a political and social environment conducive to democracy in recent years, but there is still much to be done. Although the constitution of Uganda and the Access to Information Act of 2006 ensure the right of access to information and protect citizens' right to hold their government accountable, most Ugandans still find it difficult to follow the activities of government. With 80% of the population residing in rural areas and 30% of the population illiterate, Uganda faces unique challenges in maintaining an informed citizenry. In order to effectively hold their leaders accountable, all Ugandans – rural and urban, literate and illiterate – must know who their representatives are and how well they have performed. They must know what decisions have been made on their behalf and how their tax money was spent.

The Parliamentary Scorecard Project seeks to provide Ugandans with this critical information, thereby empowering them to monitor their elected representatives and to make informed choices at election time. The Scorecard is distinctive in that it offers objective, reliable, and transparent measures of how Members of Parliament perform in plenary sittings and parliamentary committees, as well as in their constituencies. By disseminating accurate, objective, and comprehensive information about the performance of each of Uganda's elected MPs, the Africa Leadership Institute (ALI) hopes to help foster greater transparency and ultimately greater democratic accountability in Uganda.

This year's Parliamentary Performance Scorecard is new and improved, reflecting the useful feedback we received from MPs and the public over the last year. We have refined the Scorecard methodology, diversified the data collected, added information on constituency performance and other new measures, and eliminated extraneous measures.

The grades contained herein do not reflect a political agenda and no personal politics have swayed the scores assigned to individual MPs. Indeed, the scores are based on publicly available data collected systematically over the course of the year and can be checked and replicated by any individual wishing to do so.

The Parliamentary Performance Scorecard focuses on three arenas in which MPs perform their duties as advocates for the interests of their constituents and the country: plenary sittings of Parliament, committee work, and activities in the constituency.

- Plenary Sittings. MPs are obligated to attend plenary sittings. These meetings provide members with an opportunity to present the views of their constituents, raise new issues, and debate the important challenges facing Uganda. For this reason, the Scorecard evaluates MPs on their attendance, participation, and debate influence in these plenary debates and provides information on the positions they take and the topics on which they focus.
- Committee Activities. Much of Parliament's work is conducted in committee meetings, where bills are reviewed and amended, budgetary decisions are made, and important oversight duties are performed. An approach that focuses on what happens in plenary sittings alone runs the risk of not giving enough credit to MPs for the activities they undertake behind the scenes. To reflect this work, the Scorecard provides information on committee membership and reports data on the attendance and participation of MPs in committee meetings.
- Constituency Activities. MPs are elected by local constituencies and although these areas may be far from the halls of Parliament, MPs are obligated to maintain a presence in their constituencies. Therefore, in addition to grading MPs' plenary and committee performance, the Scorecard also examines MPs' constituency activities. The Scorecard records the MPs' LC-V meeting attendance, whether or not they maintain a local office and local staff, whether or not they accounted for their Constituency Development Funds (CDF), and how accessible they are to their constituents. The Scorecard also includes space for MPs to report back to their constituents on how they spent their CDF money, although AFLI has made no effort to verify these self-reports. Additional information about the MPs' self-reported constituency activities can be found on our website at www.aflia.org.

The Parliamentary Performance Scorecard is the most ambitious attempt yet to open government to public scrutiny and to help voters realise their right to information about their elected officials. But we firmly believe that MPs will also benefit from this effort as constituents come to better understand the work that takes place in Parliament. Whereas MPs previously struggled to gain appreciation for their activities in Kampala and the constraints they face in their work, the Scorecard will provide them with a tool to better communicate to their constituents what they do. They will also be able to use the data provided by the Scorecards to reflect on and improve their own performance in advance of the next general election.

2 THE ROAD TO THE 2007 – 2008 SCORECARD

The first Scorecard for the Eighth Parliament was released on 13 December 2007. The Scorecard met with broad acceptance among MPs, civil society, the press, and the public. It received a great deal of favorable media coverage by local and international newspapers and radio stations. Local newspapers were swamped with Letters to the Editor from citizens expressing their support for the Scorecard or questioning their representatives' records in light of the grades they received. The Scorecard sparked a national debate over the value of special interest MPs, particularly UPDF representatives, the appropriate size of Parliament, the proper roles and responsibilities of an MP, and Parliament's place in Ugandan democracy. The 2006 – 2007 Scorecard provided voters with valuable information, won widespread coverage in the press, and fostered a national dialogue about the roles and performance of MPs. Crucially, the Scorecard also captured the attention of Parliament. Almost immediately following the publication of the first Scorecard, MPs began to take notice that their performance was, for the first time, being monitored and graded. When a number of MPs arrived late to a Parliamentary session, the Speaker warned them that now they were being watched!

Nevertheless, the 2006 – 2007 Scorecard was still a work in progress. The publication of the Scorecard met with some valid criticisms and concerns on the part of MPs and others. In response to these critiques, AFLI embarked on a process of revamping and revising the Scorecard's methodology. As part of this process, on 16 April 2008 AFLI held a consultative workshop with 75 MPs and numerous members of the press and civil society. The workshop participants were invited to air their concerns about the Scorecard and offer ideas for improving it. Following the workshop, AFLI continued to meet with MPs to hear their concerns and simultaneously began to implement some of the reforms suggested by MPs, academics, media, and civil society. This year's Scorecard is the culmination of months of dialogue, consultation, and revision. It is the most comprehensive and accurate Scorecard AFLI has produced yet, and it will serve as the model for all future iterations of the Scorecard.

3 REFORMS TO THE SCORECARD

Although there was widespread support for the 2006 – 2007 Scorecard, we received a number of suggestions and requests for reforms. After much internal debate and numerous consultations with a wide array of individuals representing civil society, academia, and Parliament, AFLI decided to revamp the Scorecard for the 2007 – 2008 publication. The new Scorecard includes new measures of performance in two key areas:

- Constituency Activities. The Scorecard now reports detailed information about each MP's constituency activities and assigns each MP a grade based on his/her constituency work. New measures include an assessment of MP accessibility, constituency infrastructure (i.e. office and staff), LC-V attendance, and Constituency Development Fund accounting. The constituency information, demanded by MPs and voters alike, is a vital addition to the Scorecard and ensures that voters are aware of all facets of their MPs' performance, not just those duties that are fulfilled in Kampala.
- MPs' Reputation. While much of an MP's performance can be measured by examining publicly available information, there is a limit to what this data can reveal. MPs perform a great deal of their work away from the public eye. Only other MPs truly have a sense of how well an MP performs in party caucuses and private meetings and how well an MP collaborates with others. Moreover, although the participation and debate influence measures attempt to capture information about the quality of an MP's work, it is possible that there are very good MP's who speak concisely (and thus may not have high participation scores) and whose comments, while intelligent and useful, do not solicit much debate (and thus do not lead to high debate influence scores). In response to concerns about the limitations of the Scorecard in capturing quality and to the demands of MPs to play a role in the Scorecard data collection process, we distributed a reputation survey to every Member of Parliament asking them to rate their fellow MPs on six measures. We received completed surveys from 113 MPs assessing the performance of 90% of Parliament. The MPs' responses form the basis of the reputation measure on the Scorecard. This new measure is the best way we can provide information to voters about the quality of MPs' performance without introducing researcher bias into the Scorecard (as would be true if we rated the quality of MPs' work ourselves).

In addition, the new Scorecard reflects the following reforms to our existing measures:

- Committee Reports. In previous versions of the Scorecard, an MP who presented a committee report received participation and debate influence credit for doing so. However, many MPs objected that although the reports are generally presented by the chairperson of the committee, they represent the collaborative effort of the entire committee. Therefore, this year's Scorecard awards participation credit to every MP who signed a committee report that is presented on the floor. Where we were unable to obtain a committee report that was presented in plenary, only the MP who presented the report received credit for it.
- Committee Transcripts. With the help of Parliament, we were able to improve our committee data collection in this Scorecard. In the last Scorecard, we could not provide complete committee data for many MPs because we were only able to obtain 25% of the committee transcripts from Parliament. This year we collected about 40% of the committee transcripts and were thus able to provide a more complete Scorecard for more MPs. Going forward, we would welcome a partnership with Parliament to ensure that all discussions in committees are recorded.
- Separating Ministers from Backbenchers. Responding to the concern that Ministers are afforded greater opportunity to participate in plenary sittings than are backbenchers, we now report the top performers in each category disaggregated by frontbencher and backbencher status. In addition, where overall grades are provided, we indicate on the Scorecard itself the average score of frontbenchers and backbenchers to facilitate comparison.
- Official Leave. We recognize that many MPs have official responsibilities that take them outside of Kampala on occasion and which may cause them to miss plenary sittings and committee meetings for legitimate reasons. Certainly, representing Uganda abroad is an important duty of MPs. Constituents should be aware that some MPs' absences from Parliament are necessary for the completion of official duties elsewhere. For this reason, we requested from Parliament a list of official leaves of absence granted to each MP to include in this year's Scorecard. Unfortunately, there was no procedure in place for making this data public and available for use in the Scorecard, and our many attempts to elicit it from Parliament were unsuccessful. However, if Parliament provides this data in the future, we are prepared to credit MPs for both the plenary sittings and committee meetings they missed during official leaves. A space for excused absences has been created on the Scorecard as an indication of our commitment to including this data should it be made available to us.

These reforms have helped to make the 2007 – 2008 Scorecard more comprehensive, accurate, and informative than previous versions of the Scorecard. We could not, however, institute every reform suggested to us. There were a number of reforms that we debated internally but ultimately decided could not be implemented without compromising the objectivity, transparency, and accuracy of the Scorecard. These include:

- Separating Ministers from Backbenchers. Although we debated grading ministers separately from backbenchers, ultimately we decided against such a change because it would hinder our efforts to provide voters with the most complete information possible. Instead, we have altered the top ten tables in Section 6 of this report so that frontbenchers are compared to frontbenchers and backbenchers to backbenchers. In addition, where overall grades are provided, we indicate on the Scorecard itself the average score of frontbenchers and backbenchers to facilitate comparison.
- Measuring Individual Level Productivity. We considered adding a measure to the Scorecard that provided data on the productivity of individual MPs in Parliament. Such a section might have reported how many questions each MP asked, how many statements each MP made, along with similar data. However, we decided against instituting this reform because the measure would not have been distinct enough from the participation measure and because there is not enough variation in MPs' productivity to make the data useful. As an alternative to including individual level productivity data, we have included a section in this report on the aggregate productivity of Parliament (see Section 4).
- Reporting the Frequency of Constituency Visits. In a survey AFLI distributed to all MPs we asked the MPs how frequently they visit their constituencies. Although there was some variation in the responses, most MPs reported visiting twice a month, which is the number of government-funded visits they are allotted. Because we have no way of verifying these responses and because there was little variation, we decided to omit them from the Scorecards, but interested readers can find them in Appendix E of this publication.
- Weighting Aspects of Performance Differently: We received many requests to create an overall grade for each MP and to assign more weight to some aspects (plenary, committee, or constituency) of an MP's work than to others. However, in keeping with our goal to provide a completely transparent Scorecard, we decided not to implement this proposal.

We have made much progress in improving our data collection processes and refining our methodology in the last two years, but there is still more that can be done. Parliament has recently begun discussing creating an official report/Hansard to record committee proceedings. AFLI whole-heartedly encourages this reform and offers its full support in implementing it. AFLI's push for greater transparency and democratic accountability in Uganda would also be greatly aided by the institution of comprehensive (and electronic) records of votes. At present there are no records of one of the most important actions taken by MPs – casting a vote in favor of positions he or she supports and against those he or she opposes. AFLI sees the timely introduction of electronic voting as the single best strategy for generating transparency about the positions MPs take, and we are committed to working with Parliament to raise funds for and implement this reform.

4 DISSEMINATING THE SCORECARD TO VOTERS

Assessing how MPs perform in Parliament through the Scorecard is only the first step. To fully develop the potential of the Scorecard as a mechanism for strengthening accountability in Uganda, AFLI is committed to getting this information into the hands of voters.

Because of language differences and the problems of illiteracy and a lack of access to television and radio in many rural constituencies, AFLI cannot rely on the publication of the Scorecard in Kampala alone. AFLI plans to visit voters directly in constituencies in an effort to deliver the information to those who ultimately cast the votes on election day.

Beginning this year, and continuing until the next parliamentary election, AFLI will organise civic education workshops in a large sample of geographic constituencies. These workshops will provide a forum in which representatives of AFLI can present the results of the Scorecard in a way that the local population can understand. MPs will be invited to attend the workshop held in their constituency in an effort to foster dialogue between constituents and MPs about the activities they undertake in Kampala. AFLI expects to continue to hold several workshops a month until the next parliamentary election.

Although the dissemination campaign will not get fully underway until after the publication of this year's Scorecard, AFLI began the process with a pilot workshop last year. The first workshop was held in Makindye West on 13 June 2008. The forum attracted 400 local participants, as well as 40 members of the press, representing newspapers and radio in both English and Luganda, and all of the major national media outlets. Both Makindye West MPs participated in the workshop, defending their records and answering questions from the panel of local leaders and from members of the audience. The workshop succeeded in drawing a large crowd and sparking a spirited and informed political discussion and debate. It represented a vivid example of democracy at its best. The Makindye West workshop will serve as a model for future Scorecard workshops around the country.

Because we cannot possibly visit every constituency in Uganda, AFLI has identified the set of constituencies in which we will hold workshops through a fair and transparent process. First, we separated constituency and district woman MPs into three categories: those representing the Ruling Party, those aligned with the Opposition, and those sitting in Parliament as Independents. Then, within each category, we ordered MPs from best to worst in terms of how they performed in plenary sittings in 2007. Finally, we selected every second MP from each of the three lists as an MP whose constituency we would visit.

Put simply, we selected the constituencies in which we would hold workshops through a fair lottery, ensuring that the number of workshops held in constituencies represented by the Ruling Party, Opposition, and Independents is reflective of their relative representation in Parliament. In total, AFLI plans to visit 147 constituencies and districts before the 2011 election. Ninety-seven (66%) are constituencies represented by the NRM, 29 (20%) are represented by an MP in the Opposition, and 21 (14%) are represented by an Independent MP. The constituencies we will visit are evenly spread around the country, with approximately a quarter each in the northern, central, eastern, and western regions. Ninety-six constituencies are represented by men and 51 by women. The constituencies selected for civic education workshops are listed in Tables 1 and 2.

In addition to holding forums on the performance of constituency MPs and district woman representatives, AFLI expects to conduct dissemination efforts for special interest MPs as well. AFLI will organise meetings with the main interest group associations – the federations of trade unions, the Army Council, and organisations representing youth and people with disabilities – at the regional or national level to inform members of these groups of the results of the Scorecard.

5 DATA SOURCES

Through this Scorecard, AFLI seeks to help citizens make sense of Parliament’s activities. To do so, we build upon important steps that Parliament has already taken to make its activities transparent. Much of the information on which the Scorecard is based, such as the debates in plenary sittings, are recorded and transcribed into a collection of documents called the “Hansard.” The Hansard has been carefully maintained by Parliament and has been made available publicly on Parliament’s website. However, while the Hansard provides an excellent record of MP activity, it is difficult for most voters to access (one needs a computer) and understand (it is lengthy and available only in English). The Scorecard seeks to make this publicly available data comprehensible and accessible to the average Ugandan voter.

The Scorecard also draws on information that Parliament regularly collects, such as plenary and committee attendance registries, committee membership lists, and transcripts of committee meetings which are public information but which are not easily accessible to constituents. Additionally, the Scorecard relies on Parliament’s Gazette, found in the library of Parliament, which contains a printed log of all committee reports. Some of these data are incomplete, leading to gaps in some of the measures. We are confident, however, that the quality of the data is improving over time and that gaps will be filled in future Scorecards. Already, we have begun to fill some of those holes, especially in committee transcript collection, but we call on Parliament to continue to improve its data collection processes.

We also rely on new sources of data. For the first time, the Scorecard includes survey data provided by the MPs themselves, evaluating how their fellow MPs perform. The Scorecard also reports MPs’ answers to survey questions about their constituency activities – in particular, whether they maintain an office and local staff – where that information could be confirmed by an independent audit conducted by AFLI. MPs whose self-reported data were not confirmed by our audit are listed in Appendices C and D. The list of MPs who accounted for their CDF spending was provided by the Clerk. Data on MPs’ attendance at LC-V meetings was obtained directly by AFLI staff in visits to clerks to council. Finally, the Scorecard reports data on the accessibility of MPs to their constituents obtained through a random-sample survey of voters in every constituency.

6 MEASURES

The data presented in the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard can be divided into two broad categories: performance data, which we use as the basis for an MP’s overall grade and relative standing, and positional data, which records the issues on which MPs focus and the positions they take.

Performance data include MPs' attendance in plenary, committee, and LC-V meetings, their participation in plenary and committee meetings, the influence they demonstrate in driving the business of Parliament forward in plenary session, their accessibility to their constituents, whether or not they maintain a local office and a local assistant, whether or not they have accounted for their CDF spending, and a peer assessment of their overall performance by other MPs. Positional data report the focus of each MP in terms of the topic of items he or she contributes to in plenary debate, the positions an MP takes on business initiated by the Government and the Opposition sides, and the ways in which an MP reports having spent his/her Constituency Development Fund. We do not generate grades based on the positions MPs take since although everyone favours better performance, people have different views on what positions MPs should take and which issues they should emphasize.

A sample scorecard is provided in Figure 1 on the next page, and, in what follows, each measure is described in detail.

A. MP Profile

The profile section of the Scorecard provides background information on the MP. Constituency and district are reported, along with the MP's status (vice president, prime minister, minister, shadow cabinet member, committee chairperson or backbencher), party affiliation (if any), and portfolio, which refers to the responsibilities the MP holds, where applicable, as a member of the cabinet or shadow cabinet. In addition, the profile lists the committees on which an MP serves, the location of the MP's local office (if he/she has one), the name and contact information of the MP's political assistant (if he/she has one), and the period of time covered by the data on the Scorecard. The MP described in the sample Scorecard, Arutun Frieda Daisy, is fictional and this sample Scorecard has been generated for illustrative purposes only. According to the Scorecard, the MP was elected to Parliament as a constituency MP to represent Kololo County in Nakasero district and holds a position as the shadow minister for East African Affairs. She is a member of the Democrat Party and sits on the Public Accounts Committee. She maintains a local office in the main trading centre in Kololo County. Her political assistant is named Moses Okello and can be reached at 0778976655. Her Scorecard covers the duration of the session – from 7 June 2007 until 15 May 2008.

A. The profile provides information on the MP.

C. The performance scores show the components that are used to determine the overall scores and grades. For each item, the Scorecard first shows the raw score (the share of meetings attended; the share of the debate that can attributed to the MP; the share of debate that was influenced by an MP; the number of people out of five who were able to obtain their MP's phone number in one day) and then provides a percentile to show how the MP performed relative to other MPs. This MP attended 53 out of 80 sittings. This is better than 90% of MPs.

The marker shows the extent to which positions taken by the MP supported or opposed Government and Opposition initiated positions. The average scores of Opposition, Independent, and NRM members are also marked for reference.

The (darker) red bars show the share of time each MP devoted to different substantive topics. The (lighter) gray bars show the extent to which parliament as a whole focused on these topics.

B. The boxes report grades for this MP in plenary, committee, and constituency. The top sixth of MPs receive an A grade, the next sixth receive a B and so on.

The arrows show how well this MP performed compared to other MPs. The best MPs get a score of 100; the worst get a score of 0. A score of 79 (for example) means that this MP did better than 79% of MPs. However, 21% of MPs did at least as well as this MP. The average scores of Opposition, NRM, and Backbencher or Frontbencher are marked for reference.

The peer assessment scores show how well this MP's peers rate her performance in six different categories: quality, analysis, teamwork, oversight, intra-party influence, and public conduct. A score of 67 in Quality (for example) means that this MP's peers believe her contributions to be more valuable than 33% of MPs. The overall percentile shows how well this MP's peers rate her overall performance compared to other MPs.

The MP's Report shows, in the MP's own words, how she spent her CDF money for 2006-2007.

B. Overall Grades for Performance

The performance section summarises the grades the MP received for plenary, committee, and constituency performance.¹ Each summary reports the ranking of the average of the percentile scores achieved on the individual measures in each category.² The average score provides an easy way to combine the scores on the different sub-components. In essence, each component carries equal weight. Because this is not the only way to combine the sub-components, we encourage readers to examine each part of the aggregate score when they assess the performance of their MP.

The percentile scores should be interpreted as follows. If an MP has a score of 70 for plenary, this means that the average of his rankings on each of the three component measures (attendance, participation, debate influence) was better than that of 70% of MPs. Overall, the MP on the sample Scorecard did well, receiving marks of A for plenary, C for committee, and A for constituency. The system used to convert scores into letter grades is simple: the top sixth of MPs receive an A, the next sixth receive a B and so on. The lowest sixth receive an F. Grades of C and D are average (in the middle of the distribution), while E grades are below average. The 10 ministers, shadow ministers, and committee chairpersons who performed best in plenary sittings are listed in Table 3 and the top 10 backbenchers are listed in Table 4. The 10 ministers, shadow ministers, and committee chairpersons who performed best in committee meetings are listed in Table 5 and the top 10 backbenchers are listed in Table 6. Finally, the 10 ministers, shadow ministers and committee chairpersons who performed best in constituency activities are listed in Table 7 and the top 10 backbenchers are listed in Table 8.

² Readers should note that the ranking of the average percentile scores is not the same as the average percentile score.

There are a number of issues to bear in mind when interpreting these results. First, the scores for plenary, committee, and constituency performance capture three distinct ways of engaging in Parliamentary activities. We do not make a claim here about which of the three is most important, nor do we create an average score across these measures.

⁴ Eleven MPs are listed in this table due to a tie for 10th place.

⁵ Eleven MPs are listed in this table due to a tie for 10th place.

Second, in order to help the reader understand how his or her MP compares to other MPs, we provide the average score for members of the Opposition and the NRM. One should be cautious in comparing the average scores of the NRM to the average scores of the Opposition. The reason is that these differences can reflect two very different things. On the one hand, they may reflect real differences in effort and performance across parties. On the other hand, they may reflect the different advantages parties have in Parliament which permit them to perform better or worse on average on the measures used in the scorecard. For example, it is possible that government parties in general have more opportunities to introduce major legislation and thereby generate more debate, so better performance by the party in government could reflect this advantage rather than a difference in effort.

Similarly, one should think critically when comparing the scores of members with different statuses in Parliament. For example, while some ministers surely do make more of an effort to perform well in Parliament than other members, these ministers may also have certain advantages, such as the right or the obligation to present Government bills on the floor, that allow them to wield more influence than backbenchers in plenary sittings. The Scorecard reports the average score for MPs of the same status (ie. minister/shadow cabinet/committee chair or backbencher) to facilitate an assessment of how well a given MP has performed. The top 10 tables are also divided into ministers, shadow cabinet members, and committee chairpersons in one group and backbenchers in the other so that readers can more easily compare MPs of like status.

Finally, it should be noted that in approximately one fifth of cases, MPs do not have an overall grade for their work in committee meetings because we do not assign grades to ministers since they cannot be members of committees.

C. Disaggregated Performance Scores

Plenary Performance

The overall plenary score is based on three measures: Attendance, Participation and Debate Influence.

Attendance. The attendance measure records the percent of plenary sittings at which an MP was present during the period 7 June 2007 – 15 May 2008. This measure is based primarily on whether an MP signed the attendance book for a given sitting. In some cases, MPs failed to sign the log book even though they were present and spoke in session. In such cases, where there is evidence that the individual participated even though he or she did not sign the log book, we record the member as present. Readers should recognise that it is possible that some MPs were present but were not given credit for it. This only occurs if the MP did not sign the attendance book and, in addition, did not contribute to the discussion on that day. Conversely, it is possible that in some cases, MPs signed the log book and did not stay for the duration of the sitting. Unfortunately, it is difficult to know when such cases arise, so there may be a small number of MPs who received credit for sittings they did not actually sit through.

We recognise that some MPs may be absent from Parliament on official business, for example attending the Pan African Parliament. For this reason, should Parliament make official leave lists available in the future, we will credit MPs for sittings missed during official leaves and beneath each MP's attendance record, we will record the number of absences which were officially excused. Readers should be aware, however, that an absence can be officially excused even if the MP is absent for personal rather than official reasons.

There were a total of 80 sittings this year, and according to official records, the MP described in the sample Scorecard attended 53 of these. Her attendance rate is therefore $53/80$, or 66%.

After we calculate these scores for every individual we convert them into a percentile. This allows voters to compare each MP's attendance to that of the rest of Parliament. The percentile score indicates that the MP described in the sample Scorecard had a better attendance rate than 90% of MPs (but poorer than that of 10%).

The top 10 ministers, shadow ministers, and committee chairpersons in terms of plenary attendance are listed in Table 9 and the top 10 backbenchers are listed in Table 10. As can be seen in these tables, these high performing MPs come from both NRM and Opposition parties.

Participation. We measure participation in plenary sittings by counting the total number of lines spoken by an MP. All types of contributions are counted, and all contributions are given equal weight (thus we do not weight points of order or questions any less than ministerial statements). All MPs who signed a committee report that is presented on the floor of Parliament are credited with participation credit for the presentation of the report even if they were not the actual presenter. Our approach to measuring participation is simple and transparent. We recognise that with this measure there is a risk, however, that MPs might be rewarded for talking too much! For this reason, voters should be sure to examine the more qualitative measures which provide information about what their MPs talk about as well as the evaluations made by peers regarding the quality of contributions.

In the example provided, the MP contributed 1175 of the total of 136,638 lines spoken during the session. In fact this is a relatively high level of participation: the average contribution among all MPs is 616 lines, so 1175 is well above average. This MP's percentile score is 85, meaning that only 15% of MPs participated at a higher rate.

The top 10 ministers, shadow ministers, and committee chairpersons in terms of participation in plenary sittings are listed in Table 11 and the top 10 backbenchers are listed in Table 12. Four of the top five ministers, shadow ministers, and committee chairpersons and two of the top five backbenchers are Opposition MPs.

Debate Influence.⁷ As we noted, the measures of attendance and participation are simple and transparent. However, they say little about the quality of an MP's participation. Assessing the quality of an intervention is difficult and is likely subject to dispute. We have adopted an approach that uses information about how other MPs react to a given intervention in order to estimate the importance of what each MP says. Unimportant or non-contentious issues are unlikely to produce significant reactions; more fundamental contributions around difficult issues are more likely to generate sustained discussion by other MPs. Put simply, in generating this measure we are assuming that Parliament is likely to spend more time on important issues than on unimportant ones. An MP's debate influence score is thus a measure of the extent to which he or she directs the Parliament to issues of importance.

The debate influence measure is constructed as follows. We say that an MP has influenced a part of the debate whenever other MPs are responding to statements made or items raised by that MP. In some cases, MPs may speak but their interventions do not generate any interest or responses from other MPs. In other cases, an MP's interventions may be so influential that they set the course of the subsequent debate. The debate influence measure reports the share of the debate that an MP has influenced in this way. MPs are also given debate influence credit when a committee report that is presented on the floor solicits a response from other MPs. As with plenary participation, any MP who signed the committee report is treated as if he/she presented it him/herself and is awarded debate influence credit as such.

⁷ In the 2006 – 2007 report, this measure was called simply "influence."

As an example, consider a case in which an MP raises a point of order regarding parliamentary proceedings and two other MPs respond, speaking three lines each, after which the first MP responds to the comments in four lines. In this case, the six lines of response by other MPs are counted towards this MP's debate influence score; these constitute parts of the debate that the MP has influenced. We do not, however, include the MP's own (direct or indirect) responses to the issues he raised. In this way, this measure allows us to capture the impact each MP has on debate in Parliament, while not rewarding them for speaking at great length on their own initiatives.

While this measure is likely to capture important aspects of influence, two caveats should be noted. The first is that it is possible that an MP makes an intervention that has a profound impact on the direction a discussion takes but does not provoke substantial direct reaction by other MPs. Such influential contributions will be underrepresented by this measure. Second, it is possible that a group of MPs collectively decide to push a debate in a given direction; these MPs may then nominate one person to take the specified action. In such cases, this measure only attributes credit to the initiator and not to the group of MPs as a whole.

Table 13 lists the top ministers, shadow ministers, and committee chairpersons on the debate influence score, and Table 14 lists the top backbenchers. The top performer among ministers and committee chairpersons, Jachan-Omach Mandir Fred, earns a debate influence score 13 times higher than the average MP. The top performer among backbenchers, Ssekikubo Theodore, manages to outperform nearly every minister, shadow minister, and committee chairperson in plenary debate influence, earning a debate influence score 12 times higher than the average MP. Both lists are dominated by NRM members but two Opposition members make the top 5 among backbenchers and one Opposition member makes the top 5 among ministers, shadow ministers, and committee chairpersons.

Committee Performance.

The overall committee score is based on two measures: Attendance and Participation.

Attendance. The disaggregated scores for committee work follow a similar logic to that for the plenary. However, the attendance measure for committees is slightly more complicated to construct because different MPs are members of different committees and so had more or less opportunity to attend. The method we use is the following. For each MP, we examined all of the committee meetings for which we have attendance sheets and matching transcripts and for which, based on committee membership data provided by the Clerk to Parliament, the MP ought to have been present.⁸ For these meetings, a member is recorded as being present if he or she is recorded on the attendance sheets or if he or she spoke at the meeting. The MP's score is then given simply by the share of these meetings at which the MP is recorded as being present.

As with attendance in plenary sittings, there is again a chance that some MPs will be recorded as being absent at some meetings even though they were present. But this will arise only if the official mechanism for recording attendance (in this case the attendance sheet) is incomplete or missing and the MP in question was silent throughout the meeting. It is also possible that some MPs will be recorded as being present even if they did not attend the meeting or if they did not stay throughout the meeting. As before, the Scorecard reports the relative performance of each MP (the percentile) as compared with the performance of all other MPs.

Table 15 lists the 10 shadow ministers and committee chairpersons who performed best on committee attendance and Table 16 lists the top 10 backbenchers. Surprisingly, the top ten backbenchers tended to outperform the top ten committee chairpersons in committee attendance. Both top ten lists are composed of at least 5 NRM members but 2 of the top 5 shadow ministers and committee chairpersons are members of the Opposition and the second best performer is an independent.

⁸ While we use lists of committee members for the second session provided to us by the Clerk to Parliament, it is possible that there are inaccuracies in these lists or that MPs changed committee membership during the term. Such errors would be unfortunate, but we have done our best to use the most reliable information collected and provided to us by the Clerk.

⁹ Ministers are not included in this table because they cannot, by the Rules of Procedure, serve on committees.

Participation. Participation in committee meetings is measured in a very simple way and one that is similar to that used in the plenary. The measure reports the number of lines each MP speaks in the committee meetings for which we have a transcript.¹⁰ For by-elected MPs, this number is multiplied by the reciprocal of the share of plenary sittings for which the MP was in office so that by-elected MPs are not punished for holding office for less time than other MPs. Committee participation scores are calculated without regard to committee membership. Thus, a backbencher who is not on any committees but chooses to participate in some committee meetings will get credit for his/her participation. By contrast, a backbencher who is not on any committees and chooses not to participate in any committee meetings will get a 0 for participation. However, ministers, who cannot, by the Rules of Procedure, be on a committee, receive N/As for committee participation.

Table 17 lists the shadow ministers and committee chairpersons who scored best on the committee participation score, and Table 18 lists the top 10 backbenchers. The score reported is the lines spoken by the given MP in all committee meetings at which he or she spoke. Readers will note that although there are more NRM members on both of the below lists, the top three performers in each are members of the Opposition, and three of the top 10 backbenchers are Independents.

¹⁰ Because we have an incomplete set of transcripts for committee meetings, there may be some concern that this measure unfairly penalizes MPs who sit on committees for which we have few transcripts. We explored an alternative measure of committee participation which adjusted MPs' scores to account for the extent of missing transcripts on their committees. The correlation between this alternative measure and our final measure is 0.87. As these measures are so similar, we elected to proceed with the simpler measure.

There is no debate influence measure for MPs' performance in committee meetings. This is because no parliamentary business is officially initiated in committees, and the debate in committee meetings is intended to be more informal.

Returning to the MP in our sample Scorecard, we see that she had an average attendance record. Her attendance rate of 40% places her above 49% of other MPs. This MP participated, but not very actively, in those meetings she attended. She spoke 80 lines in committee meetings. This rate is higher than that of 59% of MPs.

Constituency Performance

The overall constituency score is based on five measures: LC-V Attendance, CDF Accounting, Local Office, Local Assistant, and Accessibility.

LC-V Attendance. The LC-V attendance score measures the share of LC-V meetings each MP attended between 7 June 2007 and 15 May 2008. Because each LC-V meets a different number of times, the denominator varies by MP. In a few cases, the LC-V for a particular district did not meet at all in the period covered by the Scorecard. In other cases, the clerk to council did not maintain an attendance log for all the meetings held during the period covered by the Scorecard. In such cases, the MPs are not penalized; their LC-V score is simply recorded as “N/A.” As with the committee and plenary attendance scores, the LC-V attendance score is based primarily on whether an MP signed the attendance book for a given meeting. As a result, the LC-V attendance score is susceptible to some of the same potential flaws as the other two attendance measures. In some cases, an MP may have attended a meeting but failed to sign the attendance sheet. In such cases, the MP would be recorded as absent although he/she was present. However, this error is less likely to occur in LC-V meetings as an MP’s presence at an LC-V meeting is likely to be noticed and recorded.

It is also possible that, due to MPs’ relations with local council leaders or to other factors, MPs may not have always received notice of LC-V meetings or may have received notice too late. Such situations are regrettable but difficult to account for in the Scorecard. We encourage both MPs and local council leaders to work hard to solve this problem as LC-V meetings are a crucial way for MPs to stay in touch with the needs and desires of their constituents.

Table 19 lists the 10 ministers, shadow ministers, and committee chairpersons who performed best on LC-V attendance, and Table 20 lists the top 10 backbenchers. While the majority of the top performers are NRM members, two FDC members make the ministers, shadow ministers, and committee chairpersons list and two Independents make the backbenchers list.

¹³ Fourteen MPs are listed in this table due to a five-way tie for 10th place.

In the sample Scorecard provided, the MP attended 3 of the 5 LC-V meetings held in Nakasero district. Her attendance rate of 60% places this MP well above most other MPs in LC-V attendance. She ranks in the 95th percentile, having performed better than 95% of MPs.

CDF Accounting. Every constituency MP, district woman representative, and special interest MP is supposed to receive UGX 10,000,000 every year from the government’s Constituency Development Fund. This money is intended to facilitate development projects in an MP’s constituency. MPs are required by law to officially account for their CDF spending. However, not all MPs do so. On the Scorecard, the CDF accounting score is recorded as “Yes” for all MPs who officially accounted for their CDF spending and “No” for all MPs who failed to account for their CDF spending. This measure reflects official data and AFLI has not undertaken an audit of these claims. For MPs who did not receive CDF funds at all, we report “N/A” as the CDF score.

Local Office. Some MPs maintain a local office in their constituencies, making them more available to their local constituents, while others do not. The local office measure is recorded on the Scorecard as a simple “Yes,” “Not verifiable,” or “N/A”.

Our approach to capturing this measure was multifaceted in order to ensure the most accurate data possible. We began by distributing surveys to all MPs asking them to indicate whether or not they maintain a local office, and if they do so, what type of office it is and where it is located. After receiving the survey results from 150 MPs, we visited every constituency MP’s and district woman representative’s constituency. Where MPs provided us with an office location, we made every attempt to verify that they did in fact, have an office at that location. Where MPs did not provide us with an office location, we asked party leaders, local council members, and constituents whether or not they knew if the MP had an office and if so, where it was located.

If we were able to locate an MP’s office and verify that it was open during the period covered by the Scorecard, even if the MP did not return our survey or did not list his/her office on the survey, we recorded the MP’s local office score as “Yes.”

In some cases, an MP listed an office on our survey but we were not able to confirm its existence even after searching the area and asking party leaders, local council members, and constituents if they knew of it. In these cases, we record the MP’s local office score as “Not verifiable.” A list of MPs who provided local offices which we were unable to verify is available in Appendix C.

Unfortunately, we were unable to provide local office information for most special interest MPs so their local office scores are recorded as “N/A”. Because special interest MPs do not have a clear geographic constituency, we were unable to collect local office information for these MPs unless they directed us to their office through our survey. Where special interest MPs provided us with survey information about their office location, we visited the office and attempted to verify it. If we were able to locate the office and confirm that it was open during the period covered by the Scorecard, we recorded the MP’s local office score as “Yes”. If, however, we were unable to locate the office at the location provided by the MP, we reported the local office score as “Not verifiable.” If the MP did not turn in a survey, we reported the score as “N/A”. It is important to note, though, that we do not calculate constituency grades for special interest MPs so special interest MPs’ local office scores do not contribute to their overall scores.

In verifying the offices, we utilized a broad definition of an office. We reported that an MP had an office even if the office was within the party offices, the local council offices, an organization’s offices, or a shop as long as we were able to confirm that the MP used the space as an office. In addition, we reported that an MP had an office even if it was closed or otherwise inaccessible at the time of our visit as long as we were able to confirm that the office was open during the period covered by the Scorecard. However, we reported that an MP did not have an office if the space we were directed to was within a residential structure.

Local Assistant. It is presumably easier for constituents to contact MPs who have local assistants than it is for them to contact MPs who do not. In obtaining local assistant data, we utilized the same approach that we used in the local office data collection. A survey was distributed to all MPs asking them whether or not they had a local assistant and if so, how their assistant could be contacted. We visited all constituency MPs’ and district woman representatives’ constituencies in an attempt to confirm the MPs’ responses and to locate any local assistants for MPs who did not return surveys. The local assistant score is either recorded as “Yes,” “Not verifiable,” or “N/A”.

We report “Yes” if we were able to confirm that an MP had a local assistant during the period covered by the Scorecard and we were able to contact the assistant, even if the MP did not return a survey or did not list the assistant on the survey. The local assistant score is recorded as “Not verifiable” if we were unable to confirm that an MP had a local assistant during the period covered by the Scorecard or if we were unable to contact the assistant even after visiting the constituency and making multiple attempts to reach the assistant by phone.

Finally, the local assistant score is recorded as “N/A” for all special interest MPs who did not return surveys. Because special interest MPs do not have a clear geographic constituency, it would be difficult to know where to look or who to ask about their political assistants. However, where a special interest MP provided us with survey information about his political assistant, we made every attempt to contact this person and verify that he was the MP’s assistant during the period covered by the Scorecard. If we were able to contact the assistant reported by the MP in his survey, we recorded the MP’s local assistant score as “Yes.” If we were unable to contact the assistant, we recorded the MP’s local assistant score as “Not verifiable.” If the MP did not return a survey, we recorded the score as “N/A”. Readers should be aware that, as with the local office score, the local assistant score does not contribute to the overall grades of special interest MPs because we do not calculate constituency grades for these MPs.

As with the local office score, there were cases in which an MP reported having a local assistant but after an extensive search and multiple attempts at contact, we were not able to locate or contact this person. In such cases, the Scorecard reports that the MP does not have a contactable local assistant. MPs who reported having local assistants whom we could not verify are listed in Appendix D. Note that while we cannot rule out that the MP has an assistant, we are confident that the assistant to whom we were directed was not contactable.

Accessibility. The accessibility score is a measure of how accessible MPs are to their constituents. The measure is constructed using an innovative and direct approach. To develop the measure we asked five randomly selected constituents in every constituency to spend the day trying to find their MP’s phone number. The constituents were given a small cash payment to encourage them to participate, and then rewarded with an additional payment if they found the correct phone number. The accessibility score records the number of constituents out of five who were able to retrieve the MP’s correct phone number by the end of the day. If, for example, three people of the five who participated in the game were able to find their MP’s phone number, the MP was awarded an accessibility score of 3/5. We interpret this measure as a reflection of how easily a constituent can reach his/her MP to raise an issue of concern.

Returning to the MP in our sample Scorecard, we see that she performed well in the accessibility exercise. Four out of five of her constituents were able to find her phone number. Although she scored higher than the average MP, her score of 4 only puts her in the 58th percentile because many MPs received perfect scores for accessibility.

Non-Graded Measures

Peer Assessment. The peer assessment comprises one score for each of six different categories of an MP's performance: quality, analysis, teamwork, oversight, intra-party influence, and public conduct, as well as an overall percentile. To construct the measure, we asked each MP to rate 15 other randomly selected MPs on each of these dimensions.

The quality measure captures the quality and relevance of MPs' contributions in plenary sittings and committee meetings. An MP who receives a high quality score is seen by his/her peers to routinely make valuable contributions to the debate.

The analysis measure captures how active an MP is in scrutinising legislation. An MP who scores highly on analysis is viewed by other MPs to be a leader in the legislative process.

The teamwork category measures an MP's success in building support among other MPs for legislative activities. An MP who receives a high teamwork score is perceived by other MPs to be an effective coalition-builder and lobbyist for important initiatives in Parliament.

The oversight score measures an MP's effectiveness in providing oversight of the activities of the executive. An MP who scores highly on the oversight measure is seen by his/her peers to actively scrutinize bills, programmes, and budgets, participate in field visits, and effectively obtain information about the activities of the executive.

The intra-party influence score measures the extent to which an MP plays an influential role in the party caucus. For this measure, MPs grade only other MPs who are members of the same political party. An MP who performs well on intra-party influence is perceived by other MPs to be an active participant in caucus meetings and an influential member of the party. Independent MPs are not graded on this dimension.

Finally, the public conduct measure captures whether or not an MP conducts him/herself in a manner befitting an MP. An MP who receives a high score for public conduct is seen by other MPs to act as a public face for Parliament and to exert significant effort to strengthen Parliament as an institution and to improve its reputation.

To construct the MPs' peer assessment score, we averaged the scores each MP received from all other MPs who rated them. Importantly, we adjusted each measure for party bias by using information only on the extent to which a Government (or Opposition) MP was scored more or less highly than another Government (or Opposition) MP. We then assigned a percentile rank to each MP for each category and an overall percentile rank, based on their adjusted average scores.¹⁴ Thus, an MP with a quality score of 70 received a better average quality score than 70% of MPs.

Although peer assessment scores are reported on most MPs' Scorecards, we do not have sufficient data on every MP to record scores because not every MP filled out a survey. Readers should not interpret missing peer assessment scores as an indication of poor performance on the part of the MP, but simply as a lack of data. Note finally that the peer assessment measure is the only performance measure which does not contribute to any of the MPs' overall grades.

Returning to the MP in our sample Scorecard, we see that she scored relatively highly in each of the peer assessment measures as well as in the overall peer assessment score. The scores she was given by her peers placed her in the 67th percentile for quality, 70th percentile for analysis, 80th percentile for teamwork, and 60th percentile for public conduct. She does not have a score for intra-party caucus influence because she did not receive enough intra-party caucus scores from other Opposition MPs for us to calculate a score for her. The relatively high scores this MP earns in the individual peer assessment measures place her in the 78th percentile for her overall peer assessment score, above 78% of MPs.

D. Positional Scores

The next set of measures reported in the Scorecard capture aspects of the MP's position. While political party affiliation is often an important indicator of an MP's political views, it is limited in that it does not reveal differences among members of the same party. For voters to be able to make informed decisions at election time, it is important that they have access to more detailed information about the positions MPs actually take in Parliament.

MP's Position. The first positional measure – “MP's Position” – provides an estimate of how frequently an MP sides with the Government or with the Opposition. A score closer to the middle means either that the individual was typically neutral or that the person varied from item to item on how pro- or anti- Government the positions he or she took were.

¹⁴ See Appendix A for a more detailed account of the methodology used to construct this score.

Ideally, to measure position we would take advantage of recorded votes on bills. However, the absence of an electronic voting system (or any mechanism at all for recording votes consistently) in the Ugandan Parliament makes this impossible.

Instead to measure position, we graded all new items introduced in Parliament as Government or Opposition-sponsored (or neutral).¹⁵ Each time an MP spoke about one of these items, we recorded how strongly the statement supported a Government position (or opposed an Opposition position). For example, if the Foreign Affairs Minister proposes a resolution on the security situation in Sudan, those MPs who take a stance supporting that resolution are given a pro-Government score, because the item was initiated by a member of the Government cabinet. If an MP makes a statement objecting to the resolution, he receives an Opposition score for that item. If a response is ambiguous or takes no real stance on the item, it is graded as neutral.

Two steps were taken to help ensure the reliability of this measure. First, for each item we asked two distinct individuals to make independent evaluations of the positions taken in each speech. If these two coders disagreed we asked a third person, a referee, to make a final determination. Second, we asked the coders to record how certain they were about their assessments. In all cases, data were used only when the coders were able to make clear and confident determinations. It is possible, therefore, that some MPs took positions in favour of or against a motion but with insufficient clarity for the position to be registered in their score. Similarly, it is possible that many MPs took positions on items, but did not do so in statements on the floor of Parliament; in such cases, of course, their position on these issues is not captured in our score. Readers should not, however, take missing position scores as an indication of poor performance. When our coders are unsure how to score an MP's position for a particular item, no score is given, so a missing score is nothing more than an indication that our system for grading positions is imperfect. It is, however, the best system possible until Parliament chooses to begin officially recording MPs' votes.

It is important to note that the ability of the Government to effectively set the agenda in Parliament has a major impact on the average position scores of all MPs. In fact, it is not the case that the average score is neutral. The reason for this is simple and relates to the way the measure is constructed. Many resolutions and other items of business introduced by Government are uncontroversial in their most basic form (even if some Opposition MPs, and even some NRM MPs, may object to the details of their implementation).

¹⁵ Items were coded as pro-Government if they were introduced by a minister, a minister of state, or the Chief Whip of the NRM. Items were coded as pro-Opposition if they were introduced by the Leader of the Opposition or a shadow cabinet member. We also coded the positions that MPs took only on items that would eventually come up for a vote, such as bills, amendments, committee reports, resolutions, etc.

Opposition MPs may therefore be scored as supporting a Government position simply because the issue at hand is not a divisive one. As a result, almost all MPs appear to fall on the pro-Government side of the political continuum. Readers should use the average position scores for NRM and Opposition MPs as the appropriate benchmark by which to judge where each MP falls on the political spectrum, rather than the extremes suggested by the Government-Opposition continuum.

Returning now to the sample Scorecard, this MP's position score is 2.8. Although this MP is a member of the shadow cabinet, her recorded position is on average pro-Government.

Area of Focus. The business of Parliament is varied and cuts across a variety of topics. Different MPs choose to engage different issues, with some concentrating their energies on issues of governance, for example, while others focus on social issues. The topics section of the Scorecard reports the share of an MP's contributions that focus on each of eight important sectors: the economy, internal security, foreign affairs, social issues, governance, infrastructure, natural resources, and human development.

The economy category encompasses all issues related to agriculture, foreign and domestic trade, information communication technology, Uganda's economic performance, and foreign investors. Internal security includes all matters related to the LRA peace process, crime, and police. Foreign affairs covers any contribution relating to African and East African affairs, foreign relations, relations with non-government donors such as the World Bank, and military actions abroad. Social issues include anything about moral corruption, gender relations, ethnic or religious issues. A contribution is coded as relating to governance if it is pertains to either national or local government. This topic covers constitutional issues and anything about the national budget, government corruption, or political parties. Infrastructure includes contributions about electricity, roads, transportation, or the construction of hotels, hospitals, schools, or other public buildings. A contribution is reported as relating to natural resources if it pertains to water quality, deforestation, global warming, or land use. Finally, human development encompasses all issues related to health and healthcare, labour, persons with disabilities, education, or internally displaced persons (IDPs) or IDP camps.

The graph on each MP's Scorecard includes two pieces of information. The (darker) red bars provide information on the individual MP, while the (lighter) grey bars represent information about how much time Parliament as a whole spends on the different issues.

The topic graph for the sample MP shows that she focused on a diverse set of issues, concentrating more on social issues and internal security than Parliament as a whole, which spent more time on governance, human development, and the economy.

MP's Report. In the surveys we distributed to every Member of Parliament, we asked the MPs to report how they spent their CDF money for 2006 – 2007.¹⁶ All MPs were invited to provide this information, regardless of whether they officially accounted for their CDF spending. The responses of all MPs who returned a survey are printed in the Scorecard. We were not able to provide this information for MPs who did not return a survey. Readers should bear in mind that this is the only measure on the Scorecard which we were not able to verify. We include the information but leave it to voters to make their own judgment about how to interpret it.

7 THE PERFORMANCE OF PARLIAMENT

The percentile scores that we provide for each MP should help voters understand how each MP behaves in relation to all other MPs. For a fuller appreciation of the meaning of these scores, however, it is helpful to have more information about how Parliament as a whole – and different groups within it – performed.

A. Performance of Sub-Sections of Parliament

In this section we compare the performance of Members of Parliament of different parties, ascensions, genders, and regions.

Party. When one examines the data thoroughly, a number of important findings emerge. The first of these has to do with party membership. The beginning of the Eighth Parliament was an auspicious milestone for Uganda's crucial new experiment – a return to multiparty politics in the national legislature.

Under the individual merit system in place since the NRM took power in 1986, Ugandan MPs operated without the support or the constraints of formal party organisations. But parties now support candidates for elections and frame the debate on national issues, providing MPs with a like-minded caucus where they can seek support on issues important to their constituents and collectively set the parliamentary agenda.

It is natural then that Ugandan voters will look to see how different parties perform on the Scorecard. Figure 2 shows the share of seats each party controls and Figure 3 shows the distribution of scores across the three disaggregated components of the plenary scores. These are broken down by party affiliation for NRM members, members of the Opposition, and Independents.

This figure shows the distribution of (percentile) scores across three groupings of parties for the three plenary performance measures. Each distribution is represented by a box of different widths. The width of each box shows where 50% of the scores of a given party are concentrated. If a box begins at the 25th percentile for example and ends at the 60th percentile, this means that 50% of a party's members scored between 25 and 60. The red dot in the middle of each box denotes the median performance. If the dot is at the 60th percentile for example that means that half the party scored at least 60 while half scored no more than 60.

As is evident in Figure 3, Opposition members do much better on average than members of the NRM and Independents in plenary attendance and participation but on slightly better in debate influence. Members of the NRM and Independents score similarly on average, although NRM members tend to perform better in participation than Independents and Independents tend to perform better in attendance than NRM members. However, as the graph shows, most of the variation takes place within parties, not across parties. Many NRM members score better than Opposition members and vice versa. The implication is clear: party membership is a relatively poor predictor of performance. How well an individual does depends on his or her performance, and his or her place within a party, and not simply to which party he or she belongs.

Besides these major party blocks there are many other reference groups against which voters might wish to compare the performance of their representatives. For example, does a particular MP do well or poorly compared to other candidates from his region, or compared to other male candidates? Some MPs represent geographical constituencies while others speak for special interests; how does a particular MP compare to other candidates representing different types of constituencies?

The ability to make such contextual comparisons can let voters make fairer judgements than those that can be made based on overall scores alone. Further, an examination of the systematic differences between groups can help voters appreciate some of the structural features that make it easier for some representatives to score better than others. Table 21 provides the information needed to allow voters to make these judgements. The table provides information on the behaviour of MPs across all of the disaggregated measures with breakdowns by party, ascension, status, gender and region.

Figure 4 illustrates the differences among parties in plenary, committee, and constituency performance, with the number of MPs in each party listed after the party's name.

The party breakdown (shown in aggregate in Figure 4) reveals mixed results. Opposition members on average do better than NRM members or Independents in plenary performance. However, with the exception of the UPC, they generally do less well in committee and constituency performance. The UPC did particularly well this session, scoring highly in plenary, committee, and especially constituency measures.

Ascension. As was the case last session, when performance is broken down by ascension, it becomes clear that there are real differences in the performance of constituency MPs and other MPs. The data, presented in Figure 5, suggest that constituency MPs outperform other MPs in average overall performance for plenary, committee, and constituency. However, readers should note that the gap between constituency MPs and other MPs is not as wide in 2007 – 2008 as it was in 2006 – 2007. The lowest scorers, by a substantial margin, were once again representatives of the UPDF. MPs representing the UPDF attend rarely (7 sittings out of 80, on average), participate infrequently (nearly 600 lines fewer than the average constituency MP), and have no perceptible influence on debate according to our measures (more than 900 lines fewer than the average constituency MP). Again, the interpretation of these patterns should be a subject for national debate. We do not make claims here about whether these patterns reflect differences in the quality of individual MPs or more structural features of parliamentary participation.

At the same time, parties put constraints on their members in Parliament. Some have argued that it is in the caucus where the most honest debate occurs, where MPs may freely speak their minds, and where important decisions on party positions are made. The initiatives brought to the caucus by party members can then be reassigned to more senior or more “appropriate” MPs to be raised on the floor of Parliament. Critics suggest, however, that the net effect is to prevent backbenchers from voicing their thoughts and receiving credit for their initiatives in Parliament.

The data from this year's Scorecard suggest that parliamentary business is indeed dominated by a small number of MPs, often leaders of their respective parties. As Table 21 shows, Ruling Party and Opposition leaders (a term that encompasses the Prime Minister, ministers and ministers of state, shadow ministers, the party whip, and the Leader of the Opposition) both score highly on average, although for somewhat different reasons. Opposition leaders receive high scores for their high levels of participation, which are more than double the average participation scores of Government leaders. Government leaders participate less on average but are more influential when they do participate. Thus while it is entirely appropriate to reward MPs who are able to put themselves in a position of great influence without their party, voters should be aware that the participation and debate influence scores of backbenchers may not indicate a lack of energy or initiative.

However, although party membership and seniority do matter, the results also suggest that there is considerable space for members to excel based on their own energy. Table 3 on page 16 reports the scores for the top ten backbenchers with respect to overall plenary performance. All are in the top 10 percent overall and two of them are in the top 1 percent. Backbenchers clearly can excel and this is true both for MPs from the NRM and the Opposition.

Gender. The Ugandan political system recognises the important role that women have to play in politics. We report scores for 78 district woman's representatives, as well as a further 16 constituency MPs and 7 who represent other special interests who are also women. During the first session, men performed marginally better than women on average, but when only constituency MPs were examined, women performed as well or better than their male counterparts. However, this session, women perform worse than men on nearly every measure. Moreover, narrowing the scope to constituency MPs generally tends to widen rather than lessen the gap between men and women. Interestingly, this is not the case for the debate influence measure in which narrowing the scope to only constituency MPs brings women's influence score up by nearly 550 lines, surpassing the average debate influence score of male constituency MPs by 370 lines. It is important to note that although women generally perform worse than men on average, many individual women score very highly. In fact, the top performer in plenary attendance, Adong Omwony Florence, and one of the top performers in overall constituency scores, Kyokuhairwa Kyaka Vicky, are women.

Region. A final question of interest is to know whether different regions are receiving better representation. Is it the case, for example, that parliamentary business is dominated by individuals from one particular region or that members representing some other region are underperforming? As Figure 5 shows, the evidence from this year's Scorecard suggests that some regions are indeed performing better than other regions.

On average, MPs from the West perform better overall than other MPs. Moreover, unlike MPs from other regions, they perform consistently well across plenary, committee, and constituency measures. MPs from the East perform extremely well in committee measures and relatively well in plenary measures, but they perform poorly in constituency measures. Although MPs from the North perform relatively well in plenary, they perform less well in committee and constituency. MPs from the Central region, despite performing relatively well in some measures (especially debate influence and accessibility), earn relatively low average overall performance scores for plenary, committee, and constituency. Although their constituencies are closer to Parliament than those of other MPs, on average, MPs from the Central region perform considerably worse on plenary attendance than MPs from other regions. It is nonetheless the case, though, that MPs from all regions can and do perform well.

B. How Does MP Performance in 2007 – 2008 Compare to Performance in 2006 – 2007?

One goal of the Scorecard is to encourage MPs to perform better by highlighting areas in which they are performing poorly. It is therefore important to examine not just how MPs perform year by year, but also how they perform over time.

²¹ Because this graph includes by-elected MPs, we weighted the averages by the amount of time each MP spent in office.

Plenary Performance. A major finding of last year's Scorecard which was emphasized by the media was that most Members of Parliament attended plenary sittings infrequently or not at all. It is notable that the best performers in attendance this year had attendance records far superior to the best performers last year. While the top ten performers in 2006 – 2007 attended between 45% and 57% of the plenary sittings, the top performers in 2007 – 2008 attended as many as 85% of the sittings.

Indeed, attendance in the whole of Parliament is markedly higher this year than last. While average plenary attendance was just 23% last year, this year it climbed to 45%. Although fifteen MPs did not attend a single plenary session last year, this year, that number dropped to four. Moreover, while only four MPs attended over half of the plenary sittings last year, 136 MPs attended over half of the sittings this year.

On average, participation is slightly lower this year than in the first year of the Eighth Parliament. This is in part due to the fact that there were 9 fewer sittings in which MPs were able to participate this year.²² In the second session, fewer MPs participated and when they did, they spoke less on average than MPs during the first session. While 88% of MPs spoke at least one line in 2006 – 2007, only 84% of MPs spoke at least one line in 2007 – 2008. However, this year, the top-performing MPs manage to outperform last year's top performers despite having 9 fewer sittings in which to participate.

The debate influence scores are significantly higher this year than last.²³ The top performer both this year and last, Jachan-Omach Mandir Fred, scores 2 times higher in debate influence this year than he did last year. In fact, the top five performers in debate influence this year all score higher than the top performer last year. This suggests that MPs are engaging one another's prior comments more systematically in parliamentary debate.

Committee Performance. Our measures suggest that committee attendance in 2007 – 2008 is slightly lower than attendance in 2006 – 2007. Average committee attendance in the first session was 41% while average committee attendance in the second session is 40%. Although the top performers in committee attendance in 2007 – 2008 outperform the top performers in 2006 – 2007, the worst performers in 2007 –

2008 attended fewer sittings than the worst performers during the previous session. In 2006 – 2007 eight MPs attended zero meetings of their committees; in 2007 -2008 that number nearly triples.

Unfortunately, it is not possible to compare committee participation in the second session to participation in the first session because the methodology we use this year is significantly different from the methodology we have employed in the past.

Constituency Performance. Although this is the first year the Scorecard includes a Constituency Performance section, last year we did collect LC-V attendance for most districts. A comparison of the 2006 – 2007 data and the 2007 – 2008 data yields mixed results. Although the performance of the highest performing MPs has improved slightly this year, the performance of the average MP has declined. While only two MPs attended all LC-V meetings in their districts last year, three MPs attended all of their district’s LC-V meetings this year. In addition, while only 11 MPs attended more than half of their district’s LC-V meetings last year, the number rose to 13 this year. However, average attendance is lower this year than last. While the average MP attended 16% of LC-V meetings in 2006 – 2007, the average MP in 2007 – 2008 attended only 10% of meetings.

C. Parliament’s Productivity

Although the Scorecard does not distinguish between different types of plenary participation, it is important to recognize that plenary participation takes many forms. Members of Parliament may participate through asking questions, making statements, presenting papers, introducing bills, presenting committee reports, proposing bills or amendments, or by making a procedural motion or a point of order.

Questions. Any Member of Parliament may ask a question of any minister, committee chairperson, or commission member during the allotted time during most sittings of Parliament. MPs may utilize questions to obtain information regarding a Bill, motion, Parliamentary procedures, or relevant public affairs. Although MPs are able to ask up to three questions for oral reply during a given session, only 11 MPs asked just 22 questions during the 80 sittings of Parliament this session. This represents a decline in questions from last session’s already low figures of 30 questions from 19 MPs. Table 22 lists the seven MPs who asked more than one question during this session. Readers will note that all seven are backbenchers representing both the NRM and the Opposition.

Statements. Statements may be made by any Member of Parliament. Ministers may make statements for the purpose of explaining a Government policy or action. Members may make statements regarding any issue of urgent public importance or any matter of importance to their constituency. During the last session, 114 MPs made 248 statements. This represents an increase over the previous session in both the number of MPs who made statements (93 last session) and the total number of statements made (209 last session). Unsurprisingly, the Head of the Opposition and the Prime Minister made more statements than most, but nearly half of the MPs who made three or more statements were backbenchers. Table 23 below lists the nine MPs who made five or more statements.

Table 23: MPs Who Made Five or More Statements

Lukwago Erias	DP	Shadow Cabinet	5
Atim Anywar O. Beatrice	FDC	Shadow Cabinet	5

The statements covered a range of topics but the majority focused on issues of governance (38%), human development (16%), and internal security (14%).

Committee Reports. There are 25 different standing and sessional Parliamentary committees which are charged with initiating and discussing Bills, evaluating the activities of Government, conducting research, and reporting to Parliament on their activities. Committee reports may be presented to Parliament by the chairperson or by any member of the committee, but in practice they are nearly always presented by the chairperson or occasionally the deputy chairperson.

Fifty five committee reports were presented this session. This represents a slight decrease in overall committee productivity from the 2006 – 2007 session, during which committees presented 59 reports. However, it represents a small increase in some individual committees' productivity; the number of committees which presented reports rose from 18 in 2006 – 2007 to 21 in 2007 – 2008. The committee reports which were presented during the second session are listed in Table 24.

Bills. Although every MP has the right to initiate a bill, most bills are brought by ministers of state because it is extremely difficult for members to garner sufficient support to initiate a bill independent of Government. In this session, 25 bills were initiated by 13 different NRM MPs. This does not represent much of a departure from the 2006 – 2007 session when 22 bills were brought to the floor by 14 NRM MPs. Of the bills brought to the floor or voted on this year, 17 passed. The bills covered a range of topics but the majority focused on issues relating to the economy and governance. The bills, their presenters, and their status at the end of the session are listed in Table 26 below.

Amendments. Any MP may present an amendment to the House for consideration and debate. Amendments to bills, which may add to or alter the content of the original bill, are presented after the second reading of the bill before the House. In this session, 42 different MPs presented 250 amendments. Although there were 9 fewer sittings this year than last, there were more than twice as many amendments presented this year. The vast majority of amendments were brought by committee chairpersons and ministers, but some backbenchers also managed to present amendments. The majority of amendments centered on issues of human development (30%) and governance (28%). This represents a slight shift in focus from last year, when the majority of amendments focused on governance (44%) and social issues (35%).

Points of Order. Any Member of Parliament may raise a point of order if they feel that for some reason the current proceedings are not in line with the Rule of Procedure of the House. A point of order is most often raised when an MP objects to a comment made by another MP and suggests that he or she is out of order for giving false information or making unsupported accusations. However, merely having a point of order brought against one does not necessarily indicate wrongdoing. It is up to the Speaker to decide whether or not the MP violated the Rules of Procedure and either adopt or reject the point of order.

In this session, 77 different MPs brought 182 points of order against 89 MPs. Of those, 42 were adopted, 18 were rejected and the remaining 122 are pending. There were fewer points of order raised by fewer MPs against fewer MPs this session than last, when 96 MPs raised 263 points of order against 106

MPs. Table 27 lists the MPs who raised more than four points of order while Table 28 lists the MPs who had more than four points of order brought against them.

Petitions. Any MP may present a petition to Parliament to request action on a particular issue on behalf of a group of citizens. However, in the 2007 - 2008 session, only 17 MPs presented petitions. In total, 22 petitions were filed. While these numbers are low, they are considerably higher than the figures from last session when seven MPs filed just eight petitions. Almost three quarters of the petitions were presented by NRM MPs. Backbenchers presented 13 of the petitions, slightly more than the number presented by ministers, shadow ministers, and chairpersons. Table 29, below, lists the MPs who presented more than one petition. The majority of petitions (12 of 22 – about 55%) focused on issues of human development. Five petitions (about 23%) dealt with issues relating to the economy, and the remaining petitions focused on infrastructure, natural resources, social issues, and governance.

Presentation of Papers. When a bill, resolution, committee report, the budget, or any other item brought before the house requires additional background or supplementary information not contained within the item itself, an MP—most often a minister or state minister—may present papers to the House. In this session, 25 different MPs presented 40 papers. These figures are comparable to those from the last session when 25 MPs presented 42 papers. Although five backbenchers presented papers, no backbencher presented more than 1 paper.

Procedural Motions. Any Member of Parliament may make a procedural motion to help keep the debate on topic, running smoothly, and in accordance with the Rules of Procedure. However, in practice, procedural motions are generally not made by backbenchers. This year, 36 MPs made 127 procedural motions. This represents a small decline from last year when 42 MPs made 151 procedural motions. Almost 90% of procedural motions were made by NRM MPs, and more than 90% were made by ministers or committee chairpersons.

8 CONSTITUENCY PERFORMANCE

The amount of time and energy MPs put into their constituencies is a crucial determinant of how well they are able to represent the actual needs and desires of their constituents. Representative democracy cannot function effectively if elected officials are not accessible, responsive, and accountable to their constituents. This year's Scorecard recognises the importance of constituency work by including a section which grades each constituency MP and district woman representative on his/her constituency performance. Special interest MPs are not graded on their constituency performance because it is difficult to assess the accessibility and responsiveness of MPs who lack a geographic constituency.

LC-V attendance has worsened since last year, with the average rate of attendance dropping from 16% to 10%. About 69% of constituency MPs and district woman representatives never attended a single LC-V meeting in 2007 – 2008 (as compared to just over 40% in 2006 -2007), and only 13 MPs attended more than half of their district’s LC-V meetings.

Most MPs perform relatively well in the accessibility exercise. The average MP’s score is 3.5 out of 5, meaning that between 3 and 4 of the MP’s constituents (out of a total of 5) were able to obtain the MP’s phone number in the course of one day. In 80 constituencies – about 27% of sampled constituencies, all five participants received perfect scores. In seven constituencies, however, all five participants failed to obtain a correct number for their MP.

Of the 321 MPs who received CDF money in 2006 – 2007, only 13 failed to account for their spending. Readers should note however that our records indicate which MPs have accounted for this funding but not whether these accountings have been certified by the Auditor General.

We verified offices for 198 MPs and assistants for 205 MPs out of the 302 we surveyed. Nonetheless, although MPs are provided resources to facilitate the hiring of an office and staff person to handle constituent issues, nearly one third of MPs did not have verifiable constituency infrastructure of this form.

9 A NOTE ON THE SPEAKER, DEPUTY SPEAKER, AND EX-OFFICIO MPS

While we have used these measures to assign grades to nearly all MPs, the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker have special responsibilities that prevent them from carrying out the duties normally required of MPs. In fact, the Rules of Procedure specifically prohibit the presiding officer from taking part in any parliamentary debate or voting on Bills before the House. Thus, it would be inaccurate to measure the performance of the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker on the same scale as that of all other MPs and would likely under represent the performance of the Speaker and Deputy Speaker.

However, while the Rules of Procedure may in many cases prevent the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker’s from participating fully in the business of Parliament in a manner that would be reflected in this Scorecard, both of these Members are integral to the functioning of Uganda’s legislature. Indeed, no session of Parliament may proceed until the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker, or an Assistant Speaker is present. Further, the presiding officer is charged with the responsibility of preserving order and decorum in the House, and he or she holds the final authority concerning questions of order and procedure. Thus, while AFLI has decided not to include any measures of the performance of the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker in this Scorecard, this should be seen not as a criticism of their performance, but rather as a reflection of their unique official roles in Parliament.

In addition, ex-officio MPs – selected most often to fill ministerial positions – have unique rights and responsibilities that allow them, in some cases, to perform in ways that other MPs cannot, for example by presenting official government business. For this reason, while we have graded the 14 unelected MPs on the same measures as the rest of Parliament, we do not include them in the percentile calculations, but instead rank them only against the other ex-officio members.

10 LIMITATIONS OF OUR DATA

AFLI is committed to producing an objective, transparent, and nonpartisan evaluation of parliamentary performance. At the same time, the Scorecard cannot capture every relevant aspect of MP performance. Readers should keep a few caveats in mind when assessing the data reported here.

First, because AFLI strives to remain an objective observer of Parliament’s activities, none of the measures in the Scorecard derive from our assessments of the relevance or quality of contributions made by MPs. Participation and debate influence scores are based only on the quantity of contributions made by those representatives and on the length of the debate following those contributions. Peer assessment scores are based strictly on the evaluations provided by other MPs of a given MP’s performance. Failing to maintain impartiality would make it impossible to produce a purely objective evaluation. Similarly, our measures do not reward or penalise the particular positions MPs take on any issues. While we have coded contributions as “Government” or “Opposition”, we do not assign a grade for these positions or claim that either perspective is superior.

Second, there are areas in which the data available to us are incomplete, making it difficult to produce a comprehensive Scorecard. Not all of the MPs returned the survey we distributed to them. Although we were able to collect most committee attendance logs, we were unable to obtain attendance logs for three committees. In addition, some of Parliament’s work is not captured in official records. Votes in plenary sittings are not recorded, the archives of committee reports with signatures are incomplete, and there is no official committee Hansard. In all of these areas, improved records would help us make our measures more precise.

It is important to emphasize that our ability to collect complete and accurate data depends on Parliament's willingness to assist us in this endeavor. Although it was MPs themselves who most strongly demanded that official leaves be taken into account in the plenary and committee attendance measures, we were unable to obtain this information from Parliament.

Some of the information we collected is impossible to verify. Although we report the MPs' responses about how they spent their CDF money, we are unable to know with any certainty how truthful these responses were. It is also difficult to verify attendance as it is possible that some MPs sign in and then leave.

Finally, we recognise that each MP's situation is different, which may make any attempt to compare the performance of all MPs imperfect. The constitutional requirements of certain MPs, such as the Speaker or Deputy Speaker, make them inherently incomparable to other MPs and prevent them from participating in the daily debate and fulfilling other duties that all MPs normally perform. The unique circumstances of individual MPs are varied and may affect their score in any number of ways. For example, each MP has a different relationship with his or her local councilors and other leaders, meaning that some MPs attend many LC-V meetings, while others choose to boycott the meetings in protest – or may simply not be invited. Still other MPs may take advantage of worthy opportunities to travel or otherwise work on behalf of the constituencies at the cost of committee meetings or plenary sittings – for example, some MPs have been invited to represent Parliament at the Juba peace talks or at meetings of the Pan African Parliament. In each of these cases, we have attempted to collect data that would allow us to take these differences into account. In some cases, though this is simply not possible, as data are not available. For this reason we strongly encourage MPs to attend AFLI dissemination workshops and use these as an opportunity to provide richer information to voters than what is presently available.

One anomaly we have taken pains to account for in the Scorecard relates to MPs who were elected through by-elections and those who were ousted or died during the term. It is not accurate or fair to compare MPs who have taken office during the Eighth Parliament or left office before the end of the session to MPs who have had a full term in office. Thus, MPs elected and ousted in by-elections and MPs who have died are scored against the full set of MPs, but only for the period in which the MP has been in office. For example, if an MP has served since April 2008 (i.e. for the last two months of the second year of the Eighth Parliament), his or her percentile scores will be based on his or her performance (i.e. share of sittings attended, share of lines spoken in plenary, etc.) in that two month period as compared to all other MPs.

In recognising that there are limitations inherent in any attempt to assess MPs according to consistent criteria, we emphasise again that the Scorecard is a tool to start a discussion about the best way to recognise the work of MPs and inform voters. We encourage voters, members of the media, and government officials alike to query their representatives on the scores laid out here. It is possible that some aspects of an MP's performance are not captured fully by our measures, and thus that some MPs have received lower scores than are warranted. Of course, it is also possible that some MPs have received scores higher than their overall performances merit. The Scorecard should not be taken in isolation, nor interpreted as encouragement to vote for or against any particular Members of Parliament. It should simply be taken for what it is – accurate and objective information on many of the activities that MPs perform on behalf of their constituents, and indeed of all Ugandans.

11 LOOKING AHEAD

The methodology, measures, and layout of the 2007 – 2008 Scorecard represent the culmination of two years of consultation and revision and will serve as the model for all future iterations of the Scorecard. The information contained in the Scorecard will be updated, published, and distributed around the country annually until at least the 2011 election and hopefully beyond.

Over the next three years, we will organise and hold workshops in 147 of the 294 geographic constituencies in the country. The workshops will bring together local leaders, community members, and MPs, allowing constituents to view and understand the Scorecards and to question their MPs on the data contained in them. It is our hope that these workshops will provide a forum not only for distributing and explaining the Scorecards but also for democratic discussion and debate. The workshops have gotten off to a promising start, and we look forward to refining and improving them over the next three years. Although we cannot possibly visit every constituency in Uganda before 2011, we hope to be able to expand our project in future years.

12 CONCLUSION

Every voter who casts a vote based primarily on the performance of his/her representative contributes to the strengthening of democracy in Uganda. Unfortunately, many voters lack the requisite information to vote on this basis. The Scorecard seeks to empower Ugandans to make informed decisions about who is best fit to represent their constituency in Parliament by providing accurate and objective information about every MP's past performance. We are dedicated to producing the most complete and rigorous Scorecard possible every year, and we believe this year's reforms to the Scorecard and Scorecard methodology will enable us to do that. However, the Scorecard is only useful if the information reaches voters, so we hope you will join us when the Scorecard forum comes to your constituency. With your help, we can make Ugandan democracy stronger.

MP's Position

We did not have enough information to determine this MP's position relative to Government in plenary sittings. This should not be viewed as a comment on the MP's position, but rather on the fact that AFLI is conservative in its position scoring, only presenting a score where we are confident of the accuracy of the results.

MP's Position

We did not have enough information to determine this MP's position relative to Government in plenary sittings. This should not be viewed as a comment on the MP's position, but rather on the fact that AFLI is conservative in its position scoring, only presenting a score where we are confident of the accuracy of the results.

MP's Position

We did not have enough information to determine this MP's position relative to Government in plenary sittings. This should not be viewed as a comment on the MP's position, but rather on the fact that AFLI is conservative in its position scoring, only presenting a score where we are confident of the accuracy of the results.

MP's Position

We did not have enough information to determine this MP's position relative to Government in plenary sittings. This should not be viewed as a comment on the MP's position, but rather on the fact that AFLI is conservative in its position scoring, only presenting a score where we are confident of the accuracy of the results.

MP's Position

We did not have enough information to determine this MP's position relative to Government in plenary sittings. This should not be viewed as a comment on the MP's position, but rather on the fact that AFLI is conservative in its position scoring, only presenting a score where we are confident of the accuracy of the results.

MP's Position

We did not have enough information to determine this MP's position relative to Government in plenary sittings. This should not be viewed as a comment on the MP's position, but rather on the fact that AFLi is conservative in its position scoring, only presenting a score where we are confident of the accuracy of the results.

Appendix A: Technical Notes

The purpose of this appendix is to describe the exact methodology used to calculate every statistic or indicator developed as part of the Parliamentary Performance Scorecard.

1 Datasets

All of the measures provided in the scorecard are derived from one of three datasets: the plenary activities dataset (PAD), the committee activities dataset (ComAD), and the constituency activities dataset (ConAD). We describe each in turn.

1.1 The Plenary Activities Dataset (PAD)

The PAD contains data from three sources: official attendance logs, the record of official leave, and the plenary Hansard.

1.1.1 Attendance Log Data

The attendance logs are the official records of whether an individual MP is present in Parliament. An individual is recorded as being present in Parliament for a given day if his or her presence is recorded in the official log or if he or she has made an intervention of the floor of Parliament that has been recorded in the official Hansard.

1.1.2 Official Leave Data²⁵

The list of official leave, maintained by the Speaker's office, is the official record of whether an MP was excused from attendance in the House for a particular time period. An individual is recorded as being excused if the Speaker responded to the MP's request for permission to be absent; this permission is recorded in a letter from the Speaker to the MP. The PAD records the number of plenary sittings for which the MP was excused.

1.1.3 Plenary Hansard Data

Much of the information in the PAD is derived from coding of the official parliamentary Hansard by a team of enumerators. Every line of the parliamentary Hansard is read and entered into the PAD. The database records information about everything said on the floor of Parliament during plenary sittings. The process for coding the Hansard is as follows.

- a. Items: When an MP makes an intervention (proposes a bill, raises a point of order, etc.) this item is given a code and is recorded in the PAD. The name of the MP that makes the intervention is recorded along with a unique ID number for the item, and, where relevant, the ID number of the item it is referring to. In addition, we record the topic of the item (see paragraph 0). In all cases in which the item under debate is something that MPs vote upon, the position taken by the MP is recorded (see paragraph 0).
- b. Line Number References. Importantly, for every intervention by an MP and for every item in the PAD we record the first and last lines in the Hansard to which the item corresponds. As a result it is possible to refer back to the original transcripts of Parliament to check every piece of data in the PAD.
- c. Structure of the Database: The PAD preserves information on the relation of each intervention to other interventions to which it refers, directly or indirectly. This is done by recording for each item the item (if any) to which it refers. As an illustration in the following chart, each node represents one MP's contribution in the Hansard, and one corresponding entry in the database. From this example it can be seen that items are recorded in a tree: for example, contribution #25.Oct.05.0800 itself refers to a point of order (contribution #25.Oct.05.0785) which in turn refers to an amendment (#25.Oct.05.0587) and a bill (item #25.Oct.05.0010).

1.2 The Committee Activities Dataset (ComAD)

The Committee Activities Dataset contains data from three sources: official attendance logs, records of official leave, and committee transcripts. We have worked to improve our coverage of these records, and we have been successful: While in the first year we only had transcripts for 25% of committee meetings, this year we are able to report on about 40% of meetings.

1.2.1 Attendance Log Data

The attendance logs are the official records of whether an individual MP is present in committee meetings. An individual is recorded as being present in a given committee meeting if his or her presence is recorded in the official log or if he or she has made a contribution in the meeting.

1.2.2 Official Leave Data²⁶

The list of official leave, maintained by the Speaker's office, is the official record of whether an MP was excused from attendance in the House and committee meetings for a particular time period. An individual is recorded as being excused if the Speaker responded to the MP's request for permission to be absent; this permission is recorded in a letter from the Speaker to the MP. The ComAD records the number of committee meetings for which the MP was excused.

1.2.3 Committee Transcript Data

All of the information on participation in the ComAD is derived, again, from coding done by AFLI's enumerators. Every line of every committee transcript we have is read and entered into the ComAD. The process for coding transcripts is as follows.

- a. Contributions: When an MP speaks in a committee meeting of which he or she is a member, this item is given a code and is recorded in the ComAD. The name of the MP that makes the intervention is recorded along with a unique ID number for the item. Note that we go no further in the ComAD; we do not, for example, record position or the item to which a contribution in committee refers.
- b. Line Number References. As in the PAD, for every MP contribution in the ComAD we record the first and last lines in the transcript to which the item corresponds.

²⁶ Although we were unable to obtain this data this year, we include it in the methodology because it will be included in the Scorecard should Parliament provide it in the future.

- c. Structure of the Database: The ComAD is much simpler than the PAD. In fact, the database consists solely of a list of all contributions made by MPs during committee meetings.

1.3 The Constituency Activities Dataset (ConAD)

The Constituency Activities Dataset contains data from four sources: official LC-V attendance logs, a research exercise designed to measure an MP's accessibility, official CDF accounting records, and field research.

1.3.1 LC-V Attendance Log Data

The LC-V attendance logs are the official records of whether an individual MP is present at LC-V (district level) meetings. An individual is recorded as being present at the LC-V meeting for a given day if his or her presence is recorded in the official log.

1.3.2 Accessibility Data

We sent a field researcher to every constituency MP's and district woman representative's constituency in the country to collect data on the MPs' accessibility to their constituents. To measure the MPs' accessibility, the researchers asked five randomly selected participants to spend the day trying to obtain their MP's phone number. The data obtained through this research exercise comprise the accessibility data. We record data about every participant's political affiliation, gender, age, and education as well as whether or not the individual returned at the end of the exercise, and whether or not the individual returned with a correct phone number for the MP.

1.3.3 CDF Accounting Data

The Constituency Development Fund Accounting list, maintained by the Clerk to Parliament, records the names of all MPs who officially accounted for their CDF spending.

1.3.4 Field Research Data

We sent a survey to all MPs requesting information about whether or not they maintained a local office and a political assistant during the session, and if so, how we could locate each of these. Then, we sent a field researcher to every constituency to verify this information and to collect information about MPs who did not return surveys. The information our field researchers collected on the MPs' staff and offices comprises the field research data. The ConAD dataset includes data obtained from local party offices, local council offices, and the MP's office (where the MP maintains an office) about the location of every MP's office and contact information for every MP's assistant.

2 Indicators

2.1 Score and Percentiles

2.1.1 A Note on Rankings and Percentiles

Most indicators are calculated in a three-step process. First, a raw score for each MP is calculated, such as the total number of lines that an MP spoke in all Hansards. Second, each MP is ranked according to this raw score. Third, the rank is turned into a corresponding percentile. In all cases, each MP's rank is calculated as 1 + the number of MPs who have a higher raw score; thus, all MPs who tie in terms of raw score are given the same rank.

Example. If for some indicator two MPs' raw score is 10, one MP's score is 8, and three MPs' score is 7, their respective rankings would be 1, 1, 3, 4, 4, 4.

The percentile is calculated as

$$\text{Base Percentile} = 100 \times \frac{(\text{Total \# of MPs with Lower Raw Score})}{(\text{Total \# of MPs})}$$

Thus, a percentile score of 30 means that this MP did better than 30% of all MPs.

2.1.2 Averages of percentiles.

The overall scores (for plenary and committee performance) use information about the averages of individual percentile scores. The resulting scores differ from a simple average in two respects:

- First, the base percentiles are modified in order to ensure that the average percentile for a given score is exactly 50. Normally this is the case but it might not be if there are many ties; in such cases, the ties can result in a given score receiving a less than equal weight in the overall score. To prevent this from happening, we use modified percentile scores for each measure defined as follows:

$$\text{Modified Percentile} = 50 - 50 \times \frac{(\# \text{ of MPs with Lower Raw Score} - \# \text{ of MPs with Higher Raw Score})}{\text{Total \# of MPs}}$$

- Second, after the average of the modified percentiles is taken, the percentile rank of these averages is taken. This percentile of the average of the modified percentiles is then what is reported.

As a simple example, imagine that there are 10 MPs and they have scores on two issues as follows:

MP	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
Score on Item 1	1	1	1	2	2	3	4	5	10	10
Score on Item 2	10	9	1	1	4	4	3	6	8	10

In this case we can calculate the percentiles, the modified percentiles and the overall percentile scores as follows:

MP	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
Percentile on Item 1	0	0	0	30	30	50	60	70	80	80
Percentile on Item 2	80	70	0	0	30	30	20	50	60	80
Modified Percentile on Item 1	15	15	15	40	40	55	65	75	90	90
Modified Percentile on Item 2	90	75	10	10	40	40	25	55	65	90
Average Modified Percentile	52	45	13	25	40	48	45	65	77	90
Overall Percentile	60	30	0	10	20	50	30	70	80	90

As can be seen from the example, the overall percentile score differs in general from the average percentile. For example, MP 10 scored 80 on both issues reflecting the fact that he tied for first place on both. His average score would then be 80. However his overall percentile score is higher than this. He receives an overall score of 90 because, although he tied on both issue areas, he did better overall than both of the MPs with whom he tied. For other individuals, the overall percentile score is lower than their average; for example, MP 5 did better than 30% of the other candidates on both issues but only did better than 20% of people overall; this is because many of the people he did better than in some areas did much better than him in other areas.

For CDF, Office, and Staff percentiles, we use a slightly different version of this modified percentile formula. For these three measures, we do not calculate a regular percentile; we only calculate a modified percentile defined as follows:

For MPs whose Office/Staff/CDF score is Yes:

$$\text{Modified Percentile} = 50 + \frac{(\# \text{ of MPs who do not have offices (or staff or CDF)})}{\text{Total \# of MPs in the sample}}$$

For MPs whose Office/Staff/CDF score is No:

$$\text{Modified Percentile} = 50 - \frac{(\# \text{ of MPs who have offices (or staff or CDF)})}{\text{Total \# of MPs in the sample}}$$

It is important to note that the total number of MPs in the sample is different for Office/Staff and CDF. For office and staff, the sample is composed of only constituency MPs and district woman representatives. For CDF, the sample is composed of all MPs who received the CDF money for 2006 – 2007.

2.2 Plenary Indicators

We now describe each of the individual components of the plenary score.

2.2.1 Attendance

Attendance is reported as the share of the 80 plenary sittings which an MP attended as given in the data described in paragraph 1.1.1. A percentile score is then calculated according to the method described in paragraph 2.1.

2.2.2 Official Leave²⁷

Absences during official leaves are not counted against MPs. Instead, we credit MPs for having attended sittings of the House at which they were actually absent if these absences were excused by the Speaker. To do this, we add the number of absences during official leaves to the numerator in the attendance score. In addition, for each MP we report the number of absences during official leaves in the plenary attendance section of the Scorecard.

2.2.3 Participation

The raw score for participation is the total number of lines each MP speaks in the Hansards plus the number of lines spoken during the presentation of any committee reports that the MP signed, whether or not that presentation is made by the MP. The raw score is then reported as a share of the total lines spoken in Parliament (136,638). A percentile score is then calculated according to the method described in paragraph 2.1. We give credit to MPs for committee reports that they signed, because these reports are the responsibility of the entire committee that produced them and not simply of the individual that reads them. We alter the methodology slightly for MPs who left office before the end of the session or who were by-elected after the start of the session. For part-year MPs, the raw score is reported as share of the total lines spoken in Parliament while that MP was in office rather than as a share of the total lines spoken in Parliament throughout the session.

2.2.4 Debate Influence

Quantifying influence in Parliament requires a system for comparing the level of initiative shown by introducing different items, including bills, resolutions, petitions, amendments, and points of order. Rather than assigning an arbitrary “debate influence value” to every item, AFLI assumes that the length of the debate on an item is a reasonable, if imperfect, indication of its significance. Thus, each MP’s raw debate influence score is given by the sum of the number of lines in the Hansard that are devoted to debating items he or she initiated or committee reports that he or she signed. Excluded from this sum are lines the MP contributes directly to his or her own item. This exclusion is made in order to avoid double counting (an individual's own interventions are already counted in his participation score) and to reduce the scope for manipulation (an individual cannot make interventions simply to increase his own debate influence score; rather, he must truly influence the debate). The raw debate influence score is then divided by the total number of lines spoken in Parliament during the session. A percentile score is calculated according to the method described in paragraph 2.1. As with participation, the methodology for calculating debate influence is altered slightly for part-year MPs. For part-year MPs, debate influence is calculated by dividing the raw debate influence score by the total number of lines spoken during the period the MP was in office.

²⁷ Although we were unable to obtain this data this year, we include it in the methodology because it will be included in the Scorecard should Parliament provide it in the future.

2.3 Committee Indicators

Committee indicators are calculated using the ComAD as follows:

2.3.1 Attendance

The committee attendance measure is given by the percent of all committee meetings of which this MP is a member (according to records provided by Parliament) where the MP's signature appears in the log book or where an intervention by the MP is recorded in a transcript. The denominator for this percentage is given by the number of meetings of committees of which the given MP was a member for which we have either log books or transcripts for dates matching those in the log books.

2.3.2 Official Leave²⁸

If Parliament provides us with official leave data in the future, absences during official leaves will not be counted against MPs. Instead, we will credit MPs for having attended committee meetings at which they were actually absent if these absences were excused by the Speaker. To do this, we will add the number of absences during official leaves to the numerator in the attendance score. In addition, for each MP we will report the number of absences during official leaves in the committee attendance section of the Scorecard.

2.3.3 Participation

The raw score for committee participation is the number of lines that each MP speaks at committee meetings. No score is calculated for MPs who cannot be members of committees (notably government ministers) but participation scores are calculated for MPs who can but choose not to serve on committees. For by-elected MPs, the committee participation score is multiplied by the reciprocal of the fraction of plenary sittings during which the MP held office. Thus, an MP who was only in office for 10 (out of 80) sittings of Parliament will have his participation score multiplied by 8. Because we have an incomplete set of transcripts for committee meetings in Parliament, there might be concern that this measure unfairly penalizes MPs who sit on committees for which we have few transcripts. We explored an alternative measure of committee participation which adjusted MPs' scores to account for the extent of missing transcripts on their committees. The correlation between this alternative measure and our final measure is 0.87. As these measures are so similar, we elected to proceed with the simpler measure.

2.4 Constituency Indicators

Constituency indicators are calculated using the ConAD as follows:

2.4.1 LC-V Attendance

The LC-V attendance measure is given by the share of all district level meetings which an MP was officially recorded by the clerk to council as having attended. Since different districts hold different numbers of district level meetings, the denominator differs for every MP. Only meetings held during an MP's term are included in the denominator. A percentile score is calculated based on this score according to the method described in paragraph 2.1.

²⁸ Although we were unable to obtain this data this year, we include it in the methodology because it will be included in the Scorecard should Parliament provide it in the future.

2.4.2 Accessibility

The accessibility score shows the share of participants in the research game described in paragraph 1.3.2 who were able to obtain a correct phone number for their MP. For most MPs, this score is recorded as some number over five because in most constituencies, five constituents participated in the exercise. For a few MPs, the denominator is four because the field researcher was unable to find five willing participants. In no case did fewer than four constituents participate in the game. Accessibility data is only available for constituency MPs and district woman representatives who were in office at the time of the exercise, as the exercise was not carried out for special interest MPs or MPs who were no longer in office at the end of the session. A percentile score is calculated based on the accessibility score according to the method described in paragraph 2.1.

2.4.3 CDF Accounting

The CDF accounting score is recorded as a simple "yes" or "no" depending on whether or not an MP's name appeared on the official CDF Accounting list obtained from the Clerk to Parliament. For MPs who did not receive CDF money in 2006 – 2007, we report "n/a" and exclude the CDF accounting component when we calculate their constituency grade. A percentile is calculated although it is not recorded on the scorecard, for all MPs who received CDF money in 2006 - 2007 based on whether or not they accounted for their spending.

2.4.4 Local Office

The local office score is recorded as "yes" or "non-verifiable" depending on whether or not our field researchers were able to verify that an MP maintained a local office during at least part of the session. A percentile is calculated – although it is not recorded on the Scorecard, for all constituency MPs and district woman representatives who were in office at the end of the session, according to the method described in paragraph 2.1. For special interest MPs who turned in surveys, the local office score is reported as "yes" or "non-verifiable." For special interest MPs who did not turn in surveys, the local office score is reported as "n/a." It is important to note though that we do not include any special interest MPs' scores in the percentile calculations. The local office data we report for special interest MPs is purely qualitative; it does not factor into any quantitative scores.

2.4.5 Political Assistant

Like the local office score, the political assistant score is recorded as "yes" or "non-verifiable" depending on whether or not our field researchers were able to verify that an MP maintained a political assistant during at least part of the session. A percentile is calculated – although it is not recorded on the Scorecard, for all constituency MPs and district woman representatives who were in office at the end of the session, according to the method described in paragraph 2.1. For special interest MPs who turned in surveys, the political assistant score is reported as "yes" or "non-verifiable." For special interest MPs who did not turn in surveys, the political assistant score is reported as "n/a." It is important to note though that we do not include any special interest MPs' scores in the percentile calculations. The political assistant data we report for special interest MPs is purely qualitative; it does not factor into any quantitative scores.

2.5 Non-Graded Factors

In addition to the above indicators, all of which are combined into the MP's grades for plenary and committee work, information from the plenary Hansards is used to measure some factors that are not included in the grade.

2.5.1 MP's Position

Position scores are generated through the following procedure.

1. During data entry, each MP's contribution to items that are voted upon (bills, amendments, etc.) is graded on a scale between 1 and 5, where 1 indicates that the MP strongly supports the item, 2 indicates weak support, 3 = neutral, 4 = weak opposition, and 5 = strong opposition. The enumerators also record their certainty about the position on a scale of 1 (totally uncertain) to 5 (completely certain).
2. Then, all new items for which we collected this position information are graded either "Government", "Opposition", or "neutral", according to the portfolio of the individual who introduced the item. If the individual is a cabinet member (minister or state minister), the NRM Chief Whip, or the Prime Minister, then the item is graded "Government". On the other hand, if the item is introduced by a member of the shadow cabinet or the Leader of the Opposition, it is graded as "Opposition". Finally, if the initiator is neither a member of the ruling party leadership nor of the shadow cabinet, the item is graded "neutral". In exceptional circumstances, such as clearly partisan items proposed by backbenchers, AFLI staff may assign a Government or Opposition position to an item that might otherwise, under the above rules, be graded "neutral".²⁹
3. The position information on all contributions to Opposition items is then inverted (5 becomes 1, 4 becomes 2, etc). Doing this ensures that a score of 1 means either "supportive of a Government position" or "opposed to an Opposition position".
4. We then discard information if (1) the items to which an intervention refers are themselves neutral or (2) if any of the three enumerators' certainty about his or her grading is below 4 on a scale from 1 to 5 or if the average of the first two enumerators' certainty is below 4.³⁰ This conservative approach is intended to ensure that only data for which we have great confidence is used for these measures.
5. Any item that does not refer to another item that was voted upon, but that is initiated by a frontbencher, is assigned a position score concomitant with the frontbencher's caucus. Opposition cabinet members will receive a position score of 5 for their own new items, and Government leaders will receive a score of 1 for their new items.
6. Finally, we average each MP's remaining positions to get their raw position score. We only report these scores in the final scorecard if we have two or more position data points for a given MP.

MPs are then graphed on a continuum between 1 and 5, where 1 = strong Government support and 5 = strong Opposition support. Rank and percentile are not used. However, average positions for Government, Opposition, and Independent MPs are marked on the graph for each member.

²⁹ For example, the resolution on 28 June 2006, thanking the President for his State of the Nation address, is clearly partisan in nature – a "Government" item – even though it was put forth by a backbencher.

³⁰ Each Hansard is graded by two different enumerators, then those separate databases are combined into the Master database, with another enumerator examining and reconciling any discrepancies between the two. For a position score to be counted on an individual item, the average of the first two enumerators' certainties must be 4 or higher, and the final certainty in the master database must also be 4 or higher. The position in the master database is used, and the positions entered by the first two enumerators are discarded.

2.5.2 Peer Assessment

Every MP was asked to rate 15 other MPs' performance from 1 to 5 (1 being the worst and 5 the best), in six different areas: quality, analysis, teamwork, oversight, intra-party influence, and public conduct. We received surveys from 113 MPs, giving us enough data to report peer assessment scores for almost 90% of MPs. Because not all MPs handed in surveys, however, we do not have sufficient data to report peer assessment scores for some MPs. We report "n/a" for any category for which an MP was graded by two or fewer other MPs.

We adjust every score for party bias by setting the average score every MP gives to the 15 MPs assigned to him to zero and by setting the variation to one. This re-centering process ensures that no MP can be a higher grader on average than other MPs and that no MP can score members of his own party higher on average than members of other parties. Once the scores are re-centered, we calculate percentiles for each MP based on the re-centered scores. We report both individual percentiles for each category and an overall percentile for all categories. To calculate the overall percentile, we first average the re-centered scores for each MP and then calculate percentiles based on the averaged re-centered scores.

2.5.3 Topics/Sectors

Each item in the PAD is associated with one or two of the following topics or sectors.

- The Economy
- Environment and Natural Resources
- Foreign Affairs
- Governance
- Human Development
- Infrastructure
- International Security
- Social Issues

In many cases, the assignment of items to categories was clear, but in some cases, judgements were unavoidable. For example, one could discuss unemployment as a social issue, emphasising education and social programs to help the unemployed, in which case it would fall under Human Development and Social Issues. One could also discuss unemployment from an economic perspective, and advocate expanding manufacturing to solve the problem, in which case it would fall under Agriculture, Industry, and Trade. To handle such situations, a single item may be classified as pertaining to up to two (but not more than two) categories.

In cases in which the item refers to another item, the topic or scope is typically inherited from that other item with exceptions made whenever in the course of a debate there is a substantial change in topic.

The total number of lines each MP contributed to items of each topic is then summed with lines being given half weight for a given topic in cases in which the lines refer to two topics. The share of lines spoken by a given MP on a given topic are then calculated and compared to that of the average MP.

2.5.4 MP's Report

In the survey we distributed to all MPs, we asked them how they spent their CDF money for 2006 – 2007. The MPs' responses are reported in the MP's Report section of the Scorecard.

Appendix B: Glossary of Terms

Session: One year of Parliament. There will be 5 sessions of the Eighth Parliament. The 2007 – 2008 session is the second session of the Eighth Parliament.

Plenary Sitting: A meeting of the whole house of Parliament. There were 80 plenary sittings in the second session.

Committee Meeting: A meeting of a small group of Parliament assigned to investigate matters related to a specific topic. There were 28 standing, sessional and select committees in the second session which met between 4 and 128 times.

Constituency MP: MPs elected to represent geographic constituencies. There were 221 constituency MPs during the second session.

District Woman Representative: MPs elected to represent the interests of the women in a district. There were 78 district woman representatives during the second session.

Special Interest MP: MPs elected to represent marginalized or minority groups. There are 4 groups of special interest MPs: Workers (represented by 5 MPs), Youth (represented by 5 MPs), People with Disabilities (represented by 5 MPs), and UPDF (represented by 10 MPs).

Hansard: The written record of what is said in each plenary sitting.

Backbencher: Any MP who does not hold a leadership position (such as minister, shadow minister, or committee chairperson). There were 224 backbenchers during the second session.

Frontbencher: Any MP who holds a leadership position such as minister, shadow minister, or committee chairperson.

Minister: A Government MP who is a leader in his/her party and has been granted special responsibilities in a particular area, such as Education. A minister's area of responsibility is listed in the Portfolio section of the MP Profile on every Scorecard.

Shadow Minister: An Opposition MP who is a leader in his/her party and has been granted special responsibilities in a particular area, such as Internal Affairs and Human Rights. A shadow minister's area of responsibility is listed in the Portfolio section of the MP Profile on every Scorecard.

Committee Chairperson: The leader of a committee. There is one committee chairperson and one deputy chairperson for every committee.

LC-V Meetings: District council meetings. Every district has a local council (LC-V), comprised of locally elected leaders who are supposed to serve the interests of the district. There were between 2 and 20 LC-V meetings held in every district during the second session.

By-Elected: Not all MPs serve a full term. Sometimes MPs leave office before the end of the session because they are sick or because they pass away. Other times MPs are removed from office because a court ruled that their academic papers were illegitimate or that there was an irregularity in the election. In such cases, a by-election is held to elect a new MP to serve the rest of the term. These MPs are called by-elected MPs.
